A D V E R T I S E M E N T.

THE unexpected acceptance which the BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY has met with from the public, has encouraged the author to render it as correct and complete as it was in his power. This he could have done but very imperfectly without the generous communications of several learned and ingenious gentlemen, occasionally acknowledged in the second edition. He is particularly obliged to the late bishop of Rochester; Mr. Walpole; Mr. Cambridge; Dr. Ducarel; the reverend Mr. Farmer, master of Emmanuel College in Cambridge; the reverend Mr. Ashby, late president of St. John's; and the reverend Mr. Cole, some time fellow of King's, in that university; but principally to John Loveday, esq. of Caversham, in Oxfordshire, a gentleman, who, in conferring benefits, declines all thanks but those of his own conscience. It is sufficient for him that the person on whom they are conferred become a better, a wiser, or a happier man; though, perhaps, an utter stranger to the name and person of his benefactor. The author was here irresistibly tempted to pay his friend this slender tribute of gratitude, without his privity or consent *. It would be ingratitude not to own himself greatly obliged for the very kind and able assistance of the same gentleman's learned and worthy son, Dr. John Loveday, of Doctors Commons.

TO THE HONOURABLE

HORACE WALPOLE.

S I R,

I HAVE no intention in this dedication to commend your writings, which speak for themselves; nor your virtues, some of which are as well known as your literary accomplishments. I mean no more by it than an honest and unfeigned tribute of gratitude and respect, without design and without flattery. My name and person are known to few, as I had the good fortune to retire early to independence, obscurity, and content : My lot indeed is humble ; so are my wishes. I write neither for fame nor bread ; but have taken up the pen for the same reason that some of my brethren have laid it down, that is, only to amuse myself. I present you, Sir, with a numerous catalogue of the portraits of our countrymen, many of whom have made a considerable figure in the world. To this I have added SKETCHES of their characters. But I pretend to little more merit than the keeper of a muster-roll, who is by no means entitled to share the honours or rewards of brave and active soldiers, only for writing down their names.

THIS singular book, which has been the employment of my leisure hours for several years of my life, will, doubtless, be numbered among my idlenesses, perhaps my weaknesses ;
but,

but, I hope, never amongst my sins. The performance falls far short of my own expectation; I wish, Sir, it may, in any degree, answer yours. I was not sufficiently informed of my ignorance when I undertook it: like one walking in a fog, I fancied I saw it at a distance, when I was surrounded with it. The work, with all its defects, has afforded me much amusement, and not a little labour: the pleasure of writing resembles that of travelling; many delightful scenes present themselves on the road; but there are also objects to create disgust, and it is attended with languor and fatigue.

However well meant my poor endeavours may be, I do not expect to escape censure. To this I shall very patiently submit. All the favour that I desire from the reader is, that he will judge with the same candour with which I have written. I have attempted to act the part of an humble author; but have no kind of anxiety for fame. If I have an ambition for any thing, it is to be an honest man, and a good parish-priest; and in the next place, to have the honour to be esteemed,

S I R,

Your most obliged,

most grateful, and

most obedient humble Servant,

JAMES GRANGER.

BRITISH PORTRAITS, which are followed by their respective Characters*.

IN the following Catalogue, all portraits of such persons as flourished before the end of the reign of Henry the Seventh, are thrown into one article. In the succeeding reigns, they are ranged in the following order.

CLASS I. Kings, Queens, Princes, Princeffes, &c. of the Royal Family.

CLASS II. Great Officers of State, and of the Household.

CLASS III. Peers, ranked according to their Precedence, and such Commoners as have titles of Peerage: namely, sons of Dukes, &c. and Irish Nobility.

CLASS IV. Archbishops and Bishops, Dignitaries of the Church, and inferior Clergymen. To this Class are subjoined the Nonconforming Divines and Priests of the Church of Rome.

CLASS V. Commoners who have borne great Employments; namely, Secretaries of State, Privy-

Counsellors, Ambassadors, and such Members of the House of Commons as do not fall under other Classes.

CLASS VI. Men of the Robe ; including Chancellors, Judges, and all Lawyers.

CLASS VII. Men of the Sword ; all Officers of the Army and Navy.

CLASS VIII. Sons of Peers without Titles, Baronets, Knights, ordinary Gentlemen, and those who have enjoyed inferior civil Employments.

CLASS IX. Physicians, Poets, and other ingenious Persons, who have distinguished themselves by their Writings.

CLASS X. Painters, Artificers, Mechanics, and all of inferior Professions, not included in the other Classes.

CLASS XI. Ladies, and others, of the Female Sex, according to their Rank, &c.

CLASS XII. Persons of both Sexes, chiefly of the lowest Order of the People, remarkable from only one Circumstance in their Lives ; namely, such as lived to a great Age, deformed Persons, Convicts, &c.

The following particulars have been observed :

1. To admit such foreigners as have been naturalized, or have enjoyed any place of dignity, or office, office, and also such foreign artists as have met with employment under the British government*.

2. To place the persons in that reign, in which they were at the highest pitch of honour or preferment, if statesmen, or peers; or in which they may be supposed to have been in the full vigour of their understanding, if men of letters. But if the painter or engraver has given the date when a portrait was taken, or the age of a person may with any probability be concluded from the representation of him, then to place it in that period in which it resembled him most.

3. If a person has been eminent in several reigns, or in different characters or employments, to place the descriptions of the prints of him in the several reigns and classes, or to refer from one reign and class to another †.

4. To mention, after the English heads, at the end of each reign, 1. Such foreign princes as were allied to the royal family. 2. Foreign princes, and others, who have been knights of the Garter. 3. Foreign princes, who have visited this kingdom. 4. Ambassadors and envoys who have resided here. 5. Foreigners who have been sojourners at either of our universities. 6. Foreigners, who have been fellaws of the Royal Society. 7. Travellers of eminence who have been in England. Lastly, such as do not fall under the above divisions.

It should here be observed, that the biographical part of the work is generally confined to those persons of whom there are engraved portraits ; and that this takes in almost all characters of distinction, especially from the reign of Henry VIII. to the Revolution.

P R E F A C E.

IN every age and nation, distinguished for arts and learning, the inclination of transmitting the memory, and even the features of illustrious persons to posterity, has uniformly prevailed. The greatest poets, orators, and historians, were contemporaries with the most celebrated painters, statuaries, and engravers of gems and medals; and the desire to be acquainted with a man's aspect has ever risen, in proportion to the known excellence of his character, and the admiration of his writings*. This inclination appears to have been no less prevalent in the earlier ages of the world. The old Egyptians preserved a mummy, for the same reason that the Greeks cut a statue, or painted a portrait, * Several persons who had read Justus Lipsius's Works in Sarmatia, made a voyage into the Low Countries, on purpose to see him. It may not be improper to observe, that these persons were greatly disappointed, when they saw, in that celebrated writer, a man of a very mean aspect. Vide AUBERTUS MIRÆUS, in "Vita Lipsii," p. 32.

though it could retain little more of the human form than a skeleton*.

But no invention has better answered the end of perpetuating the memory of illustrious men, than the modern art of engraving, which I shall, without scruple, prefer to the boasted art of the Egyptians; and I would much rather be possessed of a good collection of prints of my countrymen, than a collection of their mummies, though I had a pyramid for its repository.

This art, which had its origin in Italy †, was slow in its progress into our part of the world; and after it fixed here, was long before it arrived at its present excellence; yet some of its early productions have their merit, independent of their antiquity; and the passion for engraved portraits seems to have been almost coeval with the art itself*.

* In the learned Cuper's "Lettres de Critique," &c. p. 363, in a Latin Epistle to Mons. le Clerc, is the following passage; which intimates that portrait painting is of very remote antiquity. "Versatur mihi subinde ante oculos, v. 14. cap. xxiii. "Ezekielis prophetæ; "Cumque vidisset viros depictos in pariete, imagines Chaldæorum," &c. uti vertit Hebraica verba "vulgatus interpres; και ειδεν ανδρας εζωγραφημενους επι τοις τοιχοις, εικονας Χαλδαιων, juxta LXX interpretes. Et hinc mihi dubium ortum an hæ picturæ fuerint in ipsis ædium parietibus, an vero in tabulis ex parietibus suspensis? Quominus enim tapetia designari, ut mihi equidem videtur, possint, faciunt colores, vel certe minium." A little below is this question: "An Chaldæorum pictores Hierosolymam venerint, ibique artem suam exercuerint, an vero illi etiam sese dederint Judæi, postquam præcipue Deo nuntium remiserunt, et profana numina coluerunt?"

† Some say in Germany, others, in Holland. See a curious account of the origin of engraving in the Preface to the "Chronological Series of Engravers;" Cambridge, 1770.

But the greatest excellency of this art has frequently brought it into contempt: I mean the multiplication of copies; many of which have been neglected and destroyed, merely because they were multiplied. The engraver is, in this respect, the same to the painter, that the printer is to the author. I wish I could carry on the parallel, and say that the works of both come from the press with additional beauty; though it is saying a great deal, that the productions of some of our modern artists go near to rival the pencil itself.

* Sir John Harington, in the advertisement to his translation of Ariosto, published in 1597, tells us "that he never but once saw pictures cut in brass for any book except his own; and that that book was Mr. Broughton's "Treatise on the Revelation," 8vo in which he says there are three or four pretty pictures. That the other books which he had seen in this realm, with pictures, were Livy, Gesner, Alciat's Emblems, and a book de Spectris, in Latin; and in our own tongue, the Chronicles, the Book of Martyrs, the book of Hawking and Hunting †, and Mr. Whitney's Emblems; yet all their figures were cut in wood." According to John Bagford, in his Collections for a History of Printing, published in the "Philosophical Transactions," 1707, the rolling-press was first brought into England by John Speed, author of the History of Great Britain, who first procured one from Antwerp, in 1610: but it is certain, from what we are told by Sir John Harington, and other accounts †, that we wrought off copper plates from some engine or other, even before Jultus Lipsius is said to have invented it.

† By George Turberville.

‡ See Mr. Walpole's "Catalogue of Engravers."

As to the utility of a collection of English portraits, it may perhaps be sufficient to say, that Mr. Evelyn, Mr. Ashmole, Mr. Samuel Pepys secretary to the admiralty, Mr. Thoresby, and several gentlemen of distinguished parts and learning, now living, have made considerable collections of this kind*. But I shall borrow the following quotation from a late author †, who says that a collection is useful: “Not so much for the bare entertainment “ and curiosity that there is in such artful and “ beautiful imitations, or the less solid intel“ ligence of the different modes or habits, and “ fashions of the times, as the more important “ direction and settlement of the ideas, upon
 “ the true form and features of any worthy “ and famous persons represented: and also
 “ the distinction of families, and men of supe“ rior merit in them, by their arms and mot“ toes, or emblematical allusions to their ac“ tions, writings, &c. the inscriptions of their “ titles of honour, preferments, and most “ signal services, or other observables, with
 “ the chronological particulars thereof: as “ teous banquet, a full fpread table of choice

 “ and useful communications, not only moft “ delightful to the eye, but moft instructive to “ the mind.” To thefe obfervations I fhall take the liberty to add, that in a collection of this kind, the contents of many galleries are reduced into the narrow compafs of a few volumes; and the portraits of fuch as diftin-guifhed themfelves for a long fucceffion of ages may be turned over in a few hours *.

Another advantage attending fuch an affemblage is, that the methodical arrangement has a furprifing effect upon the memory. We fee the celebrated contemporaries of every age almoft at one view, and by cafting the eye upon thofe that fat at the helm of ftate, and the instruments of great events, the mind is infenfibly led to the hiftory of that period †.

There are also many curious particulars found in the inscriptions of prints, not to be met with in any other records. These, together with the arms, mottoes, and devices, convey much the same kind of instruction as the reverses of medals*. The relation that prints bear to paintings, from which they are generally taken, is also a considerable help in leading to the knowledge of them. The antiquaries at Rome have recourse to ancient coins to prove the authenticity of a statue; and the collectors of portraits make the same use of prints in authenticating a picture. A methodical collection of engraved heads will serve as a visible representation of past events, become a kind of speaking chronicle, and carry that sort of intelligence into civil story, that in popish times was almost the sole support of religion; with this difference, that instead

“ many times answer the ends of historical pictures, and to relations or friends give a pleasure greater than any other can †.” The same author says, “ that in a good portrait we conceive a better opinion of the beauty, good sense, breeding, and other good qualities of the person, than from seeing themselves, and yet without being able to say in what particular it is unlike; for nature must be ever in view †.” “ Let a man,” saith he, “ read a character in my lord Clarendon (and certainly never was there a better painter in that kind), he will find it improved “ by seeing a picture of the same person by Vandyck †.”

of those lying legends, and fabulous relations, which spread error and superstition through the minds of men; these, by short and accurate inscriptions, may happily convey, and that in a manner almost insensible, real and useful instruction. For such a collection will delight the eye, recreate the mind, impress the imagination, fix the memory, and thereby yield no small assistance to the judgment.

There is another great benefit that may be derived from this, and which cannot be had, or at least cannot so well and easily be had, any other way. It will establish in the mind of the attentive peruser that synchronism which is so essential a part of the British history; and in which, however, some, otherwise no contemptible writers, have egregiously failed. For by studying such a collection, together with the following work, the personal history of the illustrious in every rank, and in every profession, will be referred to its proper place; and statesmen, heroes, patriots, divines, lawyers, poets, and celebrated artists, will occupy their respective stations, and be remembered in the several periods in which they really flourished: a thing in itself of very great consequence, and which once thoroughly attained in this manner, more especially by young people, will be recollected with great facility, and prove of wonderful service in reading histories and memoirs*.

I may

* Zach. Conrad ab Uffenbach, who was deservedly called the Pieretë of Germany, in the year 1704, began with avidity to collect,

I may add to this a still more important circumstance, which is the power that such a method will have in awakening genius *. For as Ulysses is said to have discovered Achilles under the disguise of a female, by exhibiting arms and implements of war; so the running over these portraits, together with the short characters of the persons, will frequently excite the latent seeds of a martial, philosophic, poetic, or literary disposition. A skilful preceptor, when he exhibits such a collection, and such a work as this to his pupil, as a mere amusement, will presently perceive the true bent of his temper, by his being struck with a Blake or a Boyle, a Hyde or a Milton. In persons of a warm and lively disposition it will appear at first sight; in those of a sedate mind, more slowly, and perhaps not till after frequent perusal. But it may be safely asserted, that if a young person had real principles collected, and methodically to arrange, the prints of persons of eminence; with which, as he acknowledged, he greatly refreshed his mind and memory after his severer studies. He was particularly cautious to procure genuine portraits, rejecting the ideal as toys and trifles fit only for the amusement of children. His friend, the excellent Schellhorn, who used to assist him in his collections, tells us, that he retained his passion for this pursuit to the time of his death. See this and more in Schellhorn's tract "De Studio Uffenbachii Bibliothecario," p. XLVI to LIII.

* "Nam sæpe audivi, Q. Maximum. P. Scipionem, præterea civitatis nostræ præclaros viros, solitos ita dicere: cum majorum imagines intuerentur, vehementissimè sibi animum ad virtutem accendi; scilicet non ceram illam neque figuram tantam vim in sese habere; sed memoria rerum gestarum eam flammam egregiis viris in pectore crescere, neque priùs sedari, quàm virtus eorum famam atque gloriam adæquaverit." of action, and a character impressed by nature, which is the only solid foundation of a vigorous attachment to any science or profession, it is in this way most likely to be found, and ought then to be cultivated with the utmost care and attention; for the efforts of nature will very rarely, if ever, deceive.

I have reason to hope, that when the great utility of such collections, and of this work, come to be thoroughly understood, it may incline gentlemen of learning, and who have the necessary opportunities, to enquire after and bring to light many portraits that have hitherto remained in obscurity, and have served only as ornaments in private families. It may be remarked, that in the uncastrated edition of Holinshed's "Chronicle*" there are large accounts of some great families, and persons who have filled important employments. In Weever's "Funeral Monuments," there is a copious detail of the ancient family of the Howards; and in Dugdale's "History of Warwickshire," there is the like display of the families of Beauchamp, from the famous manuscript history of John Roffe the antiquary.

I may likewise indulge myself in the expectation, that when it is seen how much light may be thrown on history by the heads of royal, noble, and remarkable personages, greater care will for the future be taken, especially as the arts of engraving and mezzotinto are now arrived at such perfection, in transmitting, with all possible care and exactness, this kind of prints to posterity; and that due attention will be paid to propriety and correctness, more especially in respect to dates, in all the inscriptions that are placed under and over them: by which means many material informations may be given, the neglect of which, in earlier times, is justly regretted; and many errors and mistakes prevented, which embarrass the historical memoirs of former ages †.

As collections of engraved portraits, however useful in themselves, have lain under the same prejudices with ancient coins, and have been generally esteemed as little more than empty amusements; I have endeavoured, at least, to point out a method to render them of real utility to the curious, who by forming a collection may supply the defect of English medals*. Though nothing is more useful,

† See a very ingenious and apposite passage on the utility of portraits of great men, in the "Melanges d'Histoire et de Littérature," by Dom. Bonaventure d'Argonne, under the feigned name of De Vigneul Marville, tom. iii. edit. 4. Paris, 1725, p. 386.

* See Mr. Evelyn's "Numismata," where he recommends such a collection with that view. See also an account of the defect of English medals in the "Guardian," No. 96. Dr. Swift, in order to supply this defect, proposed to lord Oxford, to coin useful, I have seldom, in repositories of prints, seen any thing like order: the poetaster frequently takes place of the poet, and the pedant of the man of genius; John Ogilby is exalted above Mr. Dryden, and Alexander Ross † has the precedence of sir Walter Raleigh, because engraved by a better hand. The following catalogue, which is carried down to the Revolution, is chiefly compiled from the valuable collections of the honourable Horace Walpole, and James West, esq. ‡ to whom, and to sir William Musgrave, I acknowledge myself under a very great obligation, for their copious communications and ready assistance in the course of this compilation. I am at a loss to express my gratitude to sir William Musgrave, who upon every occasion assisted me with his advice, supplied me with books, and favoured me with the use of two large volumes of English heads, collected by the late Mr. Thoresby of Leeds, which are now in his possession. My thanks are in a particular manner due to Mr. Walpole, who with his own hand did me the honour to add to the catalogue a description of many heads not found in Mr. West's collection*. ‡ Deceased since this preface was written.

* I must also acknowledge myself greatly indebted to Mr. Walpole, in my accounts of Artists: and for the first hint of the plan grateful acknowledgments are due to the dutchess-dowager of Portland, for the sight of a fine collection of heads at Bulstrode, and for other favours, conferred in the most obliging manner, by her grace. I am proud to own my obligations to so distinguished a writer as Dr. Campbell, for several useful observations in this preface, and also for notices of various persons mentioned in the ensuing work. I must also gratefully acknowledge, that I have received the greatest assistance from a truly worthy and judicious gentleman in the neighbourhood of Reading, though I am not at liberty to mention his name. But his extraordinary parts and extensive learning, especially in the history and antiquities of our own country, have rendered him more known than his great modesty ever inclined him to be; as merit of every kind will sooner or later discover itself. I can, with the utmost truth, apply to him what sir Richard Steel says of his excellent tutor, Dr. Ellis; that "he is above the temptation of (what is always in his power) being famous."

I must here inform the reader, that the collection of English heads, in twenty-three volumes folio, which was in the possession of James West, esq. was of great use to me; as was also Mr. Joseph Ames's catalogue of about plan of this work, communicated to me by a gentleman who had seen the fine collection of heads at Strawberry Hill. That this acknowledgment was not made before, is entirely owing to an oversight.

two thousand heads, in ten volumes folio and quarto, collected by the late Mr Nickolls, F. R. S. I was assured from what I thought the most unquestionable authority, that this collection whence Mr. Ames took his catalogue, was purchased by Mr. West*. I have not followed the example of M. Ames, in describing the dress of each person; but have generally made some remarks on the dresses of the times, at the end of the several reigns; and to avoid swelling the work to too great a bulk, I have retained only as much of the inscription as was necessary to ascertain the print, or inform the reader of any thing particularly memorable, in relation to the person. I have, for the direction of collectors, followed the example of Mr. Ashmole, in referring to many of the books before which the heads are to be found †. I have frequently described variety of prints of the same person; but as they were generally done at different periods of his life, or by * Dr. Ducarel did me the honour to inform me, in a letter, that on the 26th of December, 1771, he called on Dr. Fothergill; and that, going into his library, he did there see and handle Mr. Nickolls's original collection of English heads; and that Dr. Fothergill bought it of Mr. Nickolls's father, after his decease, for eighty guineas; and that they have never been out of his possession, since he became master of them. Were I to give the reader a detail of my authorities for Mr. West's being the proprietor of this collection, it would be a singular instance of the difficulty of finding Truth; who sometimes lurks at the bottom of her well, when she is, in appearance, before our eyes. I am now fully convinced that Dr. Fothergill is the owner of the prints in question.

† He usually made memorandums under his heads from what books they were taken.

different hands, there needs no apology for inserting them; and especially, as by comparing the several portraits, the true likeness may with more certainty be determined.

As the method of the catalogue is historical, there was the less occasion for the SKETCHES, or great OUTLINES, of personal history, and the brief anecdotes which I have added. But these I have studied to make as concise as possible: they sufficiently answer my purpose, if they give the reader a general idea of the character of each person, and afford a hint to some abler hand to reduce our biography to system.

I did not think myself obliged to quote my authors upon every occasion; but have always endeavoured to apply to such as are of the best authority, both for my collections and anecdotes.

I have been also particularly careful with respect to dates, in which there are doubtless some seeming contradictions, occasioned by the different customs among our chronologists of beginning the year with the first of January, and the twenty-fifth of March. Hence it is not unusual to find, that the same person died on the same day of the month for two years successively*. I have added the dates of engraving graving to some of Smith's heads, from an authentic manuscript, communicated by the late Mr. Mac Ardell, and copied from a catalogue of Smith's hand-writing.—It will perhaps be objected that I have given a place to mean engravings, and prints of obscure persons: but whoever studies for a useful collection should make it numerous; if for an elegant one, he may select such as please his eye, and are conformable to his taste. Of many persons there are none but meanly engraved heads; but I can easily imagine that the meanest that is described in the following work may preserve the likeness, which is the essence of a portrait, and might serve to ascertain a doubtful picture*. And this is the more probable, as most of the prints were engraved when the persons represented were well known, and any one could judge of the resemblance.

* The following absurdities, among many others, were occasioned by these different computations. In 1667, there were two Easters;

As to the obscurity of the persons, though there are a few whose merit is derived merely from the painter or engraver †, and some authors

The author is well assured that he shall be accused of vanity, and consequently of folly, in prefixing his own portrait to this work. He has nothing to alledge in his excuse, but that it was originally placed there at the repeated request of a person of distinction, to whom he had obligations. To look the world in the face without a blush was neither his voluntary act, nor is it conformable to his character.

But the engraved portrait of an author, whatever is the fate of his works, might still remain an honorary memorial of him. There is much the same kind of existence in the shadow of a man's person, that there is in the sound of his name, the utmost a posthumous fame can attain to; an existence which numbers have too eagerly sought for, with infinite disquiet to themselves and the rest of mankind*.

As painters and engravers of portraits have met with encouragement in England, I flatter myself that this first attempt towards a methodical catalogue of English heads will meet that it was a custom among the ancients for authors to prefix their pictures to their works. This is mentioned in the “Magniana,” tom. i. p. 141, where there is still further proof of the antiquity of this practice.

* At page 173 of Vincentii Paravicini “Singularia de Viris Eruditione claris,” Centuriæ tres, Basil. 1713, mention is made of several eminent persons of the last age who would neither have their portraits painted nor engraved. Their number might easily be enlarged, by instances in preceding ages. There is great reason to believe that some of these persons could, by no means, be persuaded to have their pictures drawn, lest witches and forcerers should make use of them for incantations. Others have declined it from pride, which frequently assumes the guise of modesty. Monf. Daffier, the medallist, as well as De la Tour, the painter, could not prevail on baron Montesquieu to sit for his portrait, till the former, with an air of pleasantry, said to him, “Do not you think that there is as much pride in refusing my request as there would appear in granting it?” Upon this he presently yielded.

with pardon, if not with approbation, from the curious; which I am persuaded it would more easily do, if the reader knew under what disadvantages the author, who lives in the obscurity of the country, has laboured in the course of the work.

I shall only add, that the collector of prints might further improve himself in the knowledge of personal history from engraved coins and medals *. In Speed's "Chronicle" are medals of as many of the Roman emperors as had any concern with Britain; a considerable number of coins of the Saxon, Danish, and Anglo-Saxon kings; and a complete series of coins and seals from William the Conqueror to James the First, cut in wood with great exactness, from the originals in the Cotton Collection, by Christopher Switzer. In the old and new editions of Camden's "Britannia," are various coins from the same collection. Mr. Evelyn has published a book of medals in folio; Vertue has engraved an elegant volume in quarto of the medals of the famous Simon; Dr. Ducarel has published a curious book of coins of our ancient kings; and Mr. Folkes a collection from the Conquest, in sixty-one plates †. There are also several plates in Dr. Hickes's "Thesaurus;" a large one in Mr.

* Much may be learned also from tombs and cenotaphs.

† There are some plates of coins in Martin Leake's "Historical Account of English Money," second edit. 1745; 8vo.

Thoresby's "Museum;" and a great variety of medals struck in the reigns of William and Mary, Anne, and George the First, engraved for the "Continuation of Rapin's History." Some of our English coins were engraved by Francis Perry; and there are many engravings in Mr. Snelling's "Treatises of the Gold, Silver, and Copper Coinage of England."

Note, that the heads in each class of the first article are placed according to the order of the reigns in which the persons flourished. The prints described by large h. sh. i. e. large half sheet, are such as are sometimes printed on paper of the imperial size, or on an ordinary sheet. Such as are distinguished by Illust. Head. belong to the set of portraits engraved by Houbraken and Vertue. When the names of Stent, Cooper, &c. are simply mentioned in the descriptions of prints, they denote that these people sold, or wrought them off at the rolling-press. Dates of promotions, in the margin, relate precisely to the rank or office in which the persons stand in their respective classes.

The history of England, during the Heptarchy, is, perhaps, the least interesting, and the most barren of great events, of any history of the like period, in the annals of any nation. It is an almost uninterrupted series of violence, wars, and massacres, among petty tyrants, most of whom were a disgrace to the human species. Carte has sufficiently proved in his "History of England," vol. i. p. 316. The monument at Driffeld in Yorkshire, erected in memory of Alfred, a learned king of the Northumbrians, who died in 704, has been mistaken for this king's, who was buried at Winchester.

CANUTE the DANE; Vertue sc. b. sb. From a silver coin.

Canute possessed himself of the kingdom, after his countrymen had struggled for it above 200 years. In the beginning of his reign, he struck terror into his new subjects by the many sacrifices he made to his crown, and by the rigour of his administration. But when he found himself in secure possession of the throne, he relaxed the reins of government, and grew popular. In the latter part of his life, to atone for his many acts of violence, he built churches, endowed monasteries, and imported reliques*; and had indeed a much better title to saintship than many of those that disgrace the Roman calendar. Ob. 1036.

There is an ancient wooden print of him in Caxton's "Lives of the Saints."

Edward the Confessor was more celebrated for his piety, justice, and humanity, than for his capacity for government. His denying the rights of the marriage-bed to his amiable queen Editha, is extolled by the monkish writers, as

Harold, son of earl Godwin by his second wife, niece of Canute, was, for his virtues, as well as his great and amiable qualities, worthy of the throne which he ascended upon the death of the Confessor, his brother-in-law. The English were happy under his administration, during the reign of that bigotted and weak prince. He greatly fell at the battle of Hastings, and with him the liberties of his country, 14 Oct. 1066.

† The most authentic prints of our monarchs extant, are the large heads engraved by Vertue; who has also engraved the heads of the kings from the Conquest, in one quarto plate; and another set, consisting of four plates in octavo, for Salmon's "Chronological Historian." In Rastell's Chronicle, entitled, "The Tastyne of the people," are folio prints of the king's of England, from the Conqueror to Richard III. They are whole lengths, cut in wood, and have an uncommon merit for that age. Holland, who published the "Heroologia Anglica," has also published a volume of heads of the kings, from the Conquest to the year 1618. These prints are the same with those in Martin's "Chronicle," except the title and the head of William I. Hondius has engraved many heads of our kings; and Vandrebanc a set after

It should be observed, that Vandrebanc engraved the prints of our kings and queens to Elizabeth; and that the series, done for Kennet's "Compleat History," is continued to Anne by other hands. Several of them, cut in wood, are in Grafton's "Chronicle." There is also a set in wood published by T. T. (Thomas Timmes), 1597, see Ames's "Hist. of Printing," p. 432. The set of etchings, in octavo, whole lengths, from William I. to Elizabeth, are, for the most part, ideal: their arms are upon their shields. Another set, from the Conqueror to Charles II. is in Matthew Stephenson's "Florus Britannicus," 1662, fol. A considerable number of these are done by Elstracke, and some by Delaram: the plates are nearly of a quarto size. The best impressions were published by Compton Holland, in a set entitled "Baziologia," 1618. George King has engraved folio prints of several of our monarchs: many of their heads are in Gardiner's "History of the Coal-Trade at Newcastle."

Henry I. youngest son of William the Conqueror gained the crown by usurpation, and defended it with vigour and dexterity. His engaging person and address, his courage, learning, and eloquence, have been much celebrated. The greatest blemish of his reign was his putting out the eyes of his elder brother, and confining him twenty-eight years in Cardiffe castle, in Glamorganshire*. Henry II. the first king of the house of Anjou, or Plantagenet, was endowed with qualities which raised his character above any of his predecessors. He, with a noble spirit, asserted the independency of his kingdom, in opposition to papal usurpation, annexed Ireland to the English crown, and obliged the king of Scotland to do him homage. His courage and conduct as a soldier, his wisdom as a legislator, and his impartiality as a dispenser of justice, were, like the rest of his accomplishments of body and mind, far above the level of the princes of this age.

Eleanor, queen of Henry III. was second daughter to Raymond, earl of Provence. His ambition seems to have been rather to humble than to crush his enemies; and was satisfied with the arms and title of the king of France, and a small part of his territories, when it was in his power to have made himself master of that kingdom.

He gained the victory at Cressy, Aug. 26, 1346; and instituted the order of the Garter*, 23 April, 1349. Wool began to be manufactured here by the Flemings in this reign; and gold was said to be first coined †. The largest silver coins were groats and half-groats.

In this battle he displayed all the military talents of a consummate general; and in his behaviour after it, all that moderation and humanity, especially towards the royal captive, which none but great minds are capable of, and which did him more honour than his victory.

JOHN of GAUNT, &c. in an ermined robe; small.

There is a very ancient painting of him at Badmington, in Gloucestershire, the seat of the duke of Beaufort.

John of Gaunt, or Ghent, so called from the place of his birth, was the third son of Edward the Third. He enjoyed only the empty title of king king of Castile, from his marriage with Constance, second daughter of Peter the Cruel. Began their Reigns. Though he was not invested with the power, he had, in reality, the authority of a regent of the kingdom, during the minority of Richard the Second. The haughtiness of this prince rendered him very unpopular. Ob. 3 Feb. 1399.

RICHARD II. at his devotion. He is represented young, and kneeling by his three patron saints, John the Baptist, king Edmund, and Edward the Confessor. His robe is adorned with white harts and broom-cods, alluding to his mother's arms and his own name of Plantagenista. In the other part of the picture, which consists of two tables, is the Virgin Mary surrounded with angels, to whom the king addresses his devotions. On two brass plates affixed to the original picture, which is in the collection of the earl of Pembroke, is engraved the following inscription:

“The invention of painting in oil, 1410.”

The picture was painted in 1377. It was in the royal collection, but was given by James the Second to lord Castlemain. The print was engraved by Hollar, in 1639; b. sh.

ple. The contempt for his person naturally extended itself to his government, and subjected him to the tyranny of his nobility. His impatience of this subjection impelled him to several acts of violence, from which his nature seems to have been averse. His uncle the duke of Gloucester was assassinated by his orders; and he unjustly detained the estate of Henry, duke of Lancaster, by whose procurement he was dethroned and murdered. The authors who lived nearest to his own time, inform us that he was starved to death.

HENRICUS IV. Vertue sc. b. sb. From the ancient portraits of him at Kensington*, and at Hampton Court in Herefordshire.

Sept. 29.

Henry, son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, got the crown by usurpation, and held it by the sword; a tenure which gave him perpetual inquietude, and afterwards opened such a scene of blood and cruelty as is hardly to be paralleled in any history; and it was not closed, till the two houses of York and Lancaster were united in the person of Henry the Seventh. The act for burning heretics was passed in this reign, and one of the Lollards burnt.

* The set of kings at Kensington, whence Vertue, for want of better, took several heads, are all painted by one hand, and certainly not original. There is another set, still worse, in the same place. One of the sets, probably the better, came from lord Cornwallis's gallery, at Culford in Suffolk, and were begged of him by queen Caroline. There is another set at Hardwick, and others elsewhere, equally unauthentic. I owe this note and other additions and corrections in this second edition to Mr. Horace Walpole.

HENRY

HENRY V. Sold by Roger Daniel, in Lombard-street, 4to. The family of Henry the Fifth, from a curious ancient picture in the collection of James West, Esq. is in the "Anecdotes of Painting." It was engraved by Grignion. —

HENRY V. ON his Throne. On his right hand, are two ecclesiastics. He who is on the fore-ground, has been conjectured to be the famous cardinal Lewis de Luxembourg, chancellor of France, afterwards bishop of Terouenne, and archbishop of Rouen, and perpetual administrator of the diocese of Ely. On the other side of the king, is a courtier holding a mace of office. It has also been conjectured, that he may represent the duke of Exeter, third son of John of Gaunt, who signalised his valour at the battle of Azincourt, and on other occasions. The person presenting a book to the king is John Galopes, dean of the collegiate church of St. Louis, of Salsfey, in Normandy. He was translator of cardinal Bonaventure's "Life of Christ," which he presented to Henry, in a manuscript finely illuminated. The print, which is an outline only, is etched with great exactness, by the Rev. Mr. Michael Tyson, of Benet college in Cambridge, from an illumination done in Henry's time, and belonging to the manuscript which is in the library of that college. This has far greater merit than the generality of illuminated portraits, which are altogether ideal, and drawn with little skill or truth. I have extracted this description of the etching from an account of the illuminated manuscript, written by Mr. Tyson, and printed in a single sheet. The print and this sheet were intended for companions *.

tion, valour, conduct, and fortune, were much the same. He afterwards entered into a treaty with the king of France, married Catharine de Valois his only daughter, and was declared regent and heir-apparent of that kingdom.

CATHARINE, Queen of Henry V. There is a portrait of her in the family of Henry, in the first volume of the "Anecdotes of Painting;" but there is little or no reason to believe it authentic: it may, however, serve as a memorial.

Catharine was daughter of Charles VI. of France, and Isabel his queen. Henry, when he first saw her, at the treaty of Melun, was instantly struck with her beauty. It is probable that she was brought thither to captivate the conqueror of her father's kingdom. This princess, who, after the death of Henry, was regarded as dowager of England and France, did not disdain to mix the rose and lily of these kingdoms with the Welsh leek, by descending to a marriage with Owen Tudor, a gentleman of a fine person and address, whom she fell in love with at Windsor, where he attended the court*.

* In the annotations subjoined to Drayton's epistle from Owen Tudor to queen Catharine, is the following passage. "Owen Tudor, being a courtly and active gentleman, commanded once to dance before the queene, in a turne, (not being able to recover himselfe) fell into her lap, as she sat upon a little stoole, with ny of her ladies about her."

Sir John Wynne tells us, that "Queen Catharine being a French woman borne, knew no difference between the English and Welsh nation, until her marriage being published, Owen Tudor's kindred and countrey were objected to disgrace him, as most vile and barbarous, which made her desirous to see some of his kinsmen. Whereupon he brought to her presence, John ap Meredith, and Howell ap Llewelyn ap Howell, his neare cousins, men of goodly stature and personage, but wholly destitute of bringing up and nurture; for when the queen had spoken to them in diverse languages, and they were not able to answer her, she said they were the goodliest dumbe creatures that ever she saw." Hist. of the Gwedir Family, p. 69.

A monk's cowl would have fitted this prince's head much better than a crown. He was a king only in name; and may be said to have reigned under his queen, a woman of a martial spirit. He lost his father's acquisitions in France; a great part of which, to the reproach of the English, was retaken by an army headed by a woman, sprung from the dregs of the people. In the civil war betwixt the Yorkists and Lancastrians in this reign, the greatest part of the nobility fell in the field, or by the hand of the executioner; and the throne itself was at length overturned by the prevailing faction. The king is said to have been murdered by Richard duke of Gloucester. August 31,

It is to be questioned whether either of these portraits of Margaret be of any authority. There is a figure of her in Montfaucon's "Monumens de la Monarchie Françoise." This perhaps, with some, may be still questionable; but it is natural for antiquaries to consider every thing as authentic, which is of undoubted antiquity.

The duke of Bedford, who was regent of France in the minority of Henry VI. was one of the most valiant and accomplished princes of his age. He was second brother to Henry V. and nearly resembled that hero in every thing but his good fortune, which was forced to yield to that of Joan of Arc, an enthusiastic visionary, who caused the English to raise the siege of Orleans, and soon after to evacuate their conquests in France. Ob. 14 Sept. 1435.

Grafton has recorded a remarkable instance of his sagacity*. A fellow, who affirmed that he was born blind, pretended to have received his sight at St. Alban's shrine. The duke had the curiosity to examine him; and asked of what colour his gown was, and the colours of several

There are several other prints of her; but that fine ancient one, after John Van Eyck, the inventor of painting in oil, is too considerable to be unnoticed. It is a large b. sb. without the name of the engraver.

Jaqueline, who was daughter and heir of William VI. of Bavaria, earl of Hainault, was first married to John of France, dauphin of Vienne, son of Charles VI. next to John, duke of Brabant, cousin-german to Philip the Good, duke of Burgundy. As she lived in no harmony with her second husband, she suffered herself to be carried into England, under a pretence of force; where she was soon married to Humphrey, duke of Gloucester. This marriage embroiled the duke with Philip, who intended, if possible, to prevent her from having any children. At length the pope interposed in the quarrel, and annulled the marriage. The duke soon after married Eleanor Cobham. The good duke of Burgundy suffered Jaqueline to enjoy her fourth husband in peace, after he had forced her to resign her dominions to him.

Edward IV. of the house of York, opened his way to the crown with the sword. There is a great contrast in the character of this prince, who, in the former part of his reign, was as remarkable for his activity and enterprise, as he was in the latter for his indolence, his love of pleasure, and dissipation. His heart was hardened against every movement of compassion, but extremely susceptible of the passion of love. His unrelenting cruelty towards the Lancastrians was scarcely exceeded by that of Sylla the dictator towards the Marian faction.

justice or humanity in obtaining the crown, and to have endeavoured to maintain it by fraud and violence. George Buck *, who affirms that he was neither deformed in mind nor body, was thought to have discovered as much confidence, and as little truth in that assertion, as Richard himself did in asserting his title. He had undoubtedly talents for government, and affected popularity; which occasioned the saying concerning him, That he was a bad man, but a good king †.

Anne, queen of Richard III. was widow of Henry VI. who was killed at Tewksbury by Richard, to whom she was soon after married. Such a marriage as this, unnatural as it may seem, is not much to be wondered at in a barbarous age, when massacres and murders were so familiar as to have lost their usual horror. Richard's treatment of her is said to have been such as a woman may be supposed to have merited who married the murderer of her husband. It is also recorded, that that treatment was so intolerable as to have quickly hastened her death. The admirable scene in Skakespeare, betwixt Richard and Anne, is, or ought to be, well known to every one of my readers.

HENRY VII. Payne sc. Cor regis inscrutabile.

† Mr. Walpole, who is well known to have struck new light into some of the darkest passages of English history, has brought various presumptive proofs, unknown to Buck, that Richard was neither that deformed person, nor that monster of cruelty and impiety, which he has been represented by our historians. But it must be acknowledged, that though this gentleman has done much towards clearing up the character of Richard, that he has left the matter still problematical. His arguments to prove that Perkin Warbeck was the real duke of York, appear more conclusive. I am assured by a good hand, that the lord-treasurer Oxford, who read as much of our history, and with as much judgment, as any man of his time, was entirely of that opinion.

Henry the Seventh, of the race of Tudor, or Theodore, not only put an end to the civil wars betwixt the two contending houses of York and Lancaster; but, by humbling the powerful and haughty barons, opened the way to peace and liberty. As all his passions, especially in the latter part of his life, centered in avarice, he was too selfish to study the interest, or gain the esteem of his people. The good that he did, appears to have been done for his own sake. 1485.

Elizabeth of York, the amiable queen of Henry the Seventh, by whose marriage the two houses of York and Lancaster were united, was a pattern of conjugal duty and obsequiousness; but met with very cold returns of affection from the king, whose malignity to the house of York, and jealousy of its title to the crown, extended itself even to his queen. Ob. 11 Feb. 1503.

In the book intitled, "De Origine, Moribus, et Rebus gestis Scotorum Libri decem; Auctore Joanne Leslæo, Romæ, 1578," 4to, are a considerable number of medallions of the Scottish kings, several of which Boitard has copied in his folio prints. The fine collection of coins and medals published by Anderson, at the expence of the Scottish parliament, is a well known work. But books of this kind are not strictly within my plan; though some collectors place medallions, and even small coins, in the same port folios with portraits.

John Baliol was competitor with Robert Bruce; for the crown of Scotland. Bruce was the fon of Ifabel, fecond daughter of David earl of Huntingdon; and Baliol the grandfon of Margaret, the eldeft daughter. Bruce alledged that his claim was not only founded in confanguinity, but that Alexander had moreover declared him his heir.

Robert Bruce, fon of the competitor with Baliol, stabbed John Cummin, a powerful nobleman who opposed him in his design of throwing off the English yoke, in the Cloysters * of the Grey Friars at Dumfries; upon which he proceeded to make himself master of the kingdom, and took poffeffion of the throne. Henry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, lord high-constable of England, in the reign of Edward IV *. was descended from a son of Edward III. He had great talents, which he is said to have prostituted to the infamous purposes of Richard III. and to have had a principal share in his usurpation. It is certain that he had many honours and preferments conferred upon him by Richard. Afterwards, being apprehensive that that prince meditated his destruction, he conspired to set the earl of Richmond on the throne, for which he was beheaded, 1484.

JOHANNES VIII. Pont. max. I. Baptista de Cavalariis sc. Svo.

The history of John VIII. or Pope Joan, if true, is a remarkable instance of female frailty, and strength of parts, and a signal proof of what that sex is capable, especially when prompted by the tender passion. Some writers assert that she was born in England; but the generality agree that she was a native of Mentz, and that her father was an English priest. She, very early in life, engaged in an amour with an ecclesiastic, who became her tutor. Like Eloisa, she proved a very apt scholar, and made a great progress in whatever he taught her. She attended her lover to Athens, heard the professors there, and was so rapid a proficient, that when she removed to Rome, she found few or none that could equal her in the learning of the age, and especially in divinity. She, by her knowledge and address, acquired so great respect and influence, that she succeeded Leo IV* in the papal throne. She suffered herself to be got with child by one of her domestics, and falling suddenly in labour, as she was going to the Lateran church, died upon the spot. She continued to pass for a man with all but her lovers, to the time of her death. Such is the story of Joan; which is extremely improbable in itself, and is mentioned by no author who lived near the time. It is now generally, if not absolutely, given up, after it hath been thoroughly sifted. § Dr. Hutchinson, bishop of Down and Connor, is, I believe, the last author who has troubled himself on either side of the question †. He hath tacked a dissertation on Pope Joan, by way of postscript, to a sermon preached on the fifth of November, 1731, to which her story appears to have no relation. This occasioned the following stanza, written by an Irish wit.

“ God’s blessing be upon his heart ‡,”

Who wrote the Book of Witches.

And proved Joan in petticoats

The same with John in breeches.”

It is obvious to observe here, that the son of this bishop was unfortunate in his courtship, and gave occasion to the well-known tale of the Squire and the Apple-Pie.

† Joan was first mentioned by Marianus Scotus, a writer of the eleventh century.

‡ “ God’s blessing be upon her heart” is an expression applied to the queen in the sermon here mentioned.

* In Lupton’s “ Lives of the Fathers,” 1640, 4to, are heads of Venerable Bede the historian; Anselm, archbishop of Canterbury, the great stickler for the celibacy of the clergy; Alexander, of the monastery of Hales, or Hayles, the master of Thomas Aquinas, and the great leader of him and the rest of the schoolmen. He was surname*d* Doctor inefragabilis, and was author of an admired Comment on the four Books of the Sentences. He died 1245. These heads must be fictitious, notwithstanding what the author has said in his preface. They were engraved by G. Glover. There is a small head inscribed B. Angel Protomartyr in Anglia. He was a native of Pisa, in Tuscany, and was the first provincial of the Franciscans in England; having been appointed to this office by St. Francis himself. “ Antiq. of the English Franciscans,” p. 9. In Hierome Porter’s “ Flowers of the Lives of English Saints,” Doway, 1632, are various ideal heads.

Dunstan was abbot of Glastonbury, in the reign of Edred; and in that of Edgar, he was promoted to the see of Canterbury. He was the first English prelate that opposed the marriage of the clergy. He is said to have been a good musician, painter, and graver; and to have amused himself with joinery, turning, and smithery †; in the last of which he was supposed to be employed when he seized the devil by the nose with a red-hot pair of tongs ‡. In Dr. Hickes's "Thesaurus," g. a. p. 144, is a "Picture of Jesus Christ," with St. Dunstan before it, in a devout posture, drawn by himself. The outline is not bad for that barbarous age. Adrian IV. was, in the early part of his life, reduced to the necessity of submitting to servile offices for bread. He studied in France, where, though he laboured under the pressures of poverty, he made a wonderful progress in learning. He was, for his merit, chosen abbot of St. Rufus in Provence; and, in 1146, made a cardinal. In 1154, he succeeded Anastasius the Fourth in the pontificate. He told one of his intimate friends, that all the hardships of his life were nothing in comparison of the burden of the papal crown. Such were the difficulties and sorrows which he had experienced, that he had been, as he expressed it, "strained through the limbec of affliction." Lord Lyttelton, in his admirable character of Becket, has represented him in such strong and various lights, that he hath left us at a loss to determine whether we more admire the polished courtier, and the able statesman, or detest the haughty and bigoted prelate, and outrageous incendiary.

Hugo de Balsam, when subprior of the convent of Ely, was elected bishop of that see, by the monks, in opposition to the earnest recommendation of Henry III. to elect Henry de Wingham, his chancellor. Hereupon Balsam, going to Rome, procured the pope's confirmation. Wingham, averse to his own promotion, declared that a more worthy person than himself had been chosen. The king at length acquiesced, and he was accordingly consecrated.

* Few men have done more mischief in the world than a great part of those that have been canonized for saints; who were not only bigots, but incendiaries and persecutors. As the true histories of their lives would have done them no honour, the compilers of their memoirs were not only under a necessity of filtering their characters, but of having recourse to fiction. It is not to be lamented, that such elaborate works as this of the "Life of Becket," together with the innumerable histories of miracles, pilgrimages, reliques, habits, beards, and tontures, are long since swept away among the refuse of things.

The great and useful talents of William of Wickham, especially his skill in architecture, appear to have recommended him to the favour of Edward the Third. He persuaded that monarch to pull down a great part of the castle of Windsor, and rebuild it from his plan, in that plain magnificence in which it appears at present*. He also drew the plan, and superintended the building of Queenborough castle. Wickliffe may be regarded as the father of the Reformation, as he was the first in Europe who ventured to bring religion to the test of Scripture, and ecclesiastical antiquity. The austerity of his life, and the sanctity of his manners, added great weight to his doctrine. He was indefatigable in his labours, and generally went about bare-footed, in the garb of a pilgrim. He translated the New Testament from the Vulgate, which was printed with Lewis's "History of the English Bibles," in fol. 1731. Calmet informs, that he translated the whole Bible; and that there were several manuscripts of this translation †, but that it was never printed. He died at his rectory of Lutterworth in Leicester-

I have some reason to believe that all the above prints, except that by Bartolozzi, were done after a picture which belonged to the late Dr. Doyly, Prebendary of Ely, and some time Fellow of All Souls; who, when he was at that college, in 1738, had a portrait of Archbishop Chichely, the face of which, as he then told Mr. Cole, of King's College in Cambridge ‡, was taken from one of the family. There is some probability that this may be like him, as a face, at least some features of it, has certainly been transmitted to many generations.

In 1420 he was advanced to the bishopric of Lincoln by the pope; and after he had sat in that see about four years, was, by the same power, translated to York. But this provision was, according to Godwin, so strenuously opposed by the dean and chapter of that church, and disapproved of by the king, that he was forced to return to Lincoln. He distinguished himself in the former part of his life by asserting the doctrine of Wicliffe; as he did in the latter, by his opposition to it. He caused the bones of that confessor to be taken up and burnt, according to the decree of the council of Siena. It is said, that the college which he founded, was intended as a seminary for learned men who should oppose Wicliffe's opinions. He died 25 Jan. 1430, and was buried in his own cathedral, where a sumptuous monument was erected to his memory.

Sir Gilbert Talbot, third son of John, the second Earl of Shrewsbury, was a man of various talents, and equally qualified for the business of peace or war. He commanded the right wing of the earl of Richmond's army, at the battle of Bosworth, where he was unfortunately wounded. He was one of the persons sent by Henry VII. on the expedition in behalf of Maximilian the emperor. It appears from a curious indenture, now extant, that John Pounce, citizen and grocer of London, "was placed an apprentice to Sir Gilbert Talbot, citizen and mercer of London, and merchant of the staple at Calais;" of which place he was deputy, in the same reign. He was by Henry, sent ambassador to Rome, to congratulate Pius III. upon his election to the Pontificate. Though a commoner and a citizen, he was honoured with the order of the Garter in the reign of Henry VII. He died on the 19th of September, in the seventh year of Henry VIII.

This great lawyer and statesman, who was one of the most learned men of his age, was lord chief-justice of the King's-Bench in the reign of Henry VI. and constituted chancellor to that unfortunate prince, after Edward IV. was in possession of the throne. He followed the fortunes of the house of Lancaster, and was many years in exile, with queen Margaret and prince Edward her son. Soon after the decisive battle of Tewksbury, he was thrown into prison, and attainted, with other Lancastrians: but found means to procure his pardon from Edward IV. His celebrated book "De Laudibus Legum Angliæ," was written for the use of prince Edward. Several editions of it have been published in Latin and English; to one of which Mr. Selden wrote notes. His book on the "Difference betwixt an absolute and limited Monarchy," was published by John Fortescue Aland, Esq. afterwards lord Fortescue, in 8vo. 1714. There are many portraits, at least painted memorials, of Sir William Wallace in Scotland.

This great man's heroic actions shew, what personal intrepidity, roused by resentment, and animated by success, is able to execute. After the Scots had submitted to a foreign yoke, he at the head of a few fugitives and desperadoes, dared to assert the independence of his country, and took every opportunity of attacking the English. As he was ever successful, he was continually joined by other malecontents; and born, in the reign of Edward III. He was bound apprentice to a tailor, in London; but being fortunately pressed into the army, was sent abroad, where his genius, which had been cramped and confined to the shop, soon expanded itself, and surmounted the narrow prejudices which adhered to his birth and occupation. He signalized himself as a soldier, in France and Italy, and particularly at Pifa in Florence. He commanded with great ability and success, in the army of Galeacia, Duke of Milan, and was in so high esteem with Barnabas his brother, that he gave him Domitia, his natural daughter, in marriage, with an ample fortune. But he, afterwards, from motives which we cannot well account for, and that seem to reflect upon his honour, turned his arms against his father-in-law. He died at Florence, full of years and military fame, in 1394. Having gained, among the Florentines, the character of the best soldier of the age, they erected a sumptuous monument to his memory. Paul Jovius, the celebrated biographer of illustrious men, hath written his elogy. He, in the monumental inscription, and the "Elogia," is styled Joannes Acutus; hence it is that some of our travellers have, in their journals, mentioned him under the name of John Sharp, the great captain. See more of him in Morant's "Effex," vol. ii. p. 287, &c.

*There is also a print of Sir WILLIAM WALWORTH, another Lord Mayor, who bravely stabbed Wat Tyler to the heart, and by that stroke put an end to a formidable rebellion, in the reign of Richard II. This, as some assert, gave occasion to the dagger in the first quarter of the city arms. The print was engraved by Grignon, "after the original statue," as it is called, in Fishmonger's hall*. This book appears to be of the same class, if not written by the same hand, with the well known History of Sir Richard Whittington. It contains the adventures of Sir John Hawkwood, of William, his fellow 'prentice; and of Sir Ralph Blackwell; who was a journeyman in the same shop. Hawkwood and Blackwell are said to have received the honour of knighthood from Edward III. for their valour. Romantic and extravagant as this history is, it is rather more probable than that of Whittington; as in an age, when courage and military address opened the way to fame and fortune, and the honour of knighthood was a capital distinction amongst mankind, there is greater probability that one poor man should raise himself by his sword, than that another should by a cat. Ralph Blackwell is said to have married his master's daughter, and to have enriched himself greatly by trade. It was this, chiefly, that enabled him to be the founder of Blackwell Hall. The reader will pardon a ludicrous remark for the sake of the truth of it; the Author of this History hath so characterized his heroes as to reverse the vulgar adage that nine tailors make a man: on the contrary, according to his standard, nine ordinary men are required to make a tailor. The same author informs us that Sir Ralph Blackwell was Sheriff and Alderman of London; but I do not find his name on the List of Sheriffs.

The great poet, whom antiquity and his own merit have contributed to render venerable, is said to have been master of all the learning of his age. We see, and admire, in his works, the outlines of nature; but the beauty of colouring, and the delicate touches, are now lost, as a great part of his language is grown obsolete. It is probable that his contemporaries found little or no dissonance in his verses; but they are very ill accommodated to the ears of the present age.

Taken from his monumental effigy in St. Mary Overie's church, Southwark. The nose, which was broken off, has been added of late years, the head should, in strict propriety, have been represented without one. The engraver of the antiques of Fulvius Ursinus has, among the busts and cameos of many celebrated persons of antiquity, given us the statue of Pindar without a head; to which Mr. Pope alludes,

"And a true Pindar stood without a head."

Gower, who with Chaucer, helped to refine the English language, has ever been esteemed the next in merit to him, of his cotemporary poets. He was author of the "Confessio Aman-

FOREIN PRINCES, who were Knights

SIGISMUNDUS, Romanorum rex; a large medallion in Goltzius's “Series of the Emperors,” done in clare obscure.

Sigismund, emperor of Germany, and king of Hungary and Bohemia, was installed knight of the Garter at Windsor, 1416.—He caused John Hufs, and Jerome of Prague, in violation of a safe conduct which he had given them, to be burnt at the council of Constance. Ob.

There is a better portrait of Philip, and of several other foreigners who have been Knights of the Garter, &c. in “Hadriani Barlandi Hollandiæ Comitum Historia et Icones,” Lugd. Bat. 1584, fol. In “Me-

Philip was elected knight of the Garter, but never invested with the ensigns, on account of a quarrel betwixt him and Humphrey duke of Gloucester*.—His popularity gained him the appellation of Good; but there are few princes who have been less scrupulous of sacrificing the tranquillity of their country and the lives of their subjects to their private ambition. He was the great aggrandizer of the house of Burgundy, and was possessed of five dukedoms, fifteen earldoms, and many lordships.—He instituted the order of the Golden Fleece. Ob. 1467.

Charles the Bold, or the Hardy, the last duke of Burgundy, son of Philip the Good, was remarkable for his haughtiness and precipitate courage. His father was thought to have exerted as much wisdom in curbing the impetuous spirit of his son, and keeping him within the bounds of duty and respect, as he did in extending his dominions. He married Margaret, sister to Edward IV. in his father's life-time,

MAXIMILIANUS, Rom. rex; a large medallion; in the Continuation of Goltzius's “Series of the Emperors.”

Maximilian I. grandfather of Charles V. well knowing that to footh the vanity of Henry VIII. was to take him by the right handle, ferved under him as a common foldier, for a hundred crowns a day, at the fiege of Terouenne. Henry was very near being egregiously duped by this monarch, under a pretence that he would refign the imperial crown to him; though, at the fame time, he was meditating, by dint of bribery, to add to it the papal tiara. Some parts of Maximilian's conduct are fhining, fome mean, and others ignominious. The curious reader may fee a characteristic account of this little great man, and his ridiculous writings, in the fourteenth number of “The World.” He was a much better filver-Smith than author. At the Efcorial, is an embossed pot for holy-water, and a crucifix of his manufacture. Maximilian was installed knight of the Garter, by the marquis of Brandenburgh, his proxy, in the reign of Henry VII. He married Mary, daughter and heir of Charles the Bold; by which marriage, and that of his fon Philip, with Joan, daughter of Ferdinand and Ifabella, the immense dominions of Spain and Burgundy devolved to his grandson Charles; and the house of Austria began to threaten the liberties of Europe. Ob. 1519.

Maximilian said of himself, "That whereas " other princes were Reges Hominum, he was " truly Rex Regum; because his subjects would

" of the Garter," II. p. 316.

LOVYS VII. Roy de France; a medallion, Jacques de Bie sc. b. sb.

Lewis VII. who makes a much more considerable figure in the Lives of the Saints, than in the annals of France, was as well known for his weakness as a bigot, as Eleanor his Queen * was for her frailties as a woman. He was deep in the abject superstition of the age; was a crusader, and a pilgrim. His veneration for Becket rose to enthusiasm, and extended itself even to his ashes. province of Dauphiny to the crown. John died at London 1364, soon after his return to England. It was conjectured, that he came to visit the countess of Salisbury, one of the most beautiful women of her age, with whom he was known to be in love. The noble maxim of this prince, "That if good faith should be totally abandoned by the rest of mankind, it ought still to find a place in the breast of princes," is well known.

ESTIENNE, Chevalier; "Seigneur du Vignau, du Pleffis, le Conte, et autres lieux; conseiller et secretaire des commandemens des roys Charles VII. et Lovis XI. et leur ambassadeur en Angleterre, et en Italie: decede le 3 Septembre, 1474." Short hair, a kind of collar of fur round his neck.

PHILIPPUS COMMINEZ, Argenti Domini, 4to. in Imperialis's "Museum Historicum," p. 29. There is a small head of him before the English translation of his Memoirs, 8vo. 1674.

Lewis IX. who was a great master of kingcraft, employed Philip de Comines, a most able minister, in embassies to almost every court of Europe. He tells us himself, in his Memoirs, that he was sent to that of England in the reign of Edward IV. Comines, who was formed as a writer

writer more from experience than learning, is esteemed one of the most sagacious historians of his own, or any other age. He penetrated deeply into men and things; and knew, and exemplified, the insignificancy of human grandeur. He saw the inside of the tapestry; and found, that with all its gaudy colours, it created disgust, as much as it excited admiration. He has been ranked in the same class with Tacitus. The English reader will be particularly interested in his account of the expulsion of his countrymen from France, in the reign of Charles VII. Imperialis informs us, that he died, tired of the world; but does not mention the time of his death, which was in 1509. I have placed him here as an ambassador.

She received him and his work graciously, and rewarded him like a queen. He hath written the life of this amiable princess. He hath been accused of being lavish of his panegyric on the English, and too sparing of it on his own countrymen. La Popeliniere, if the accusation be just, hath accounted for it, by saying, that he received nothing for his labours from the French, but was rewarded with a good pension by the English. The time of his death is not known. His Chronicle was translated

HENRY the Eighth, and JANE SEYMOUR his queen. See Artic. I. Class I.

This

This despotic monarch held the nation in greater subjection than any of its conquerors; and did more by his will, than any of his predecessors could have done with the sword. He was, in his own estimation, the wisest prince in Europe; but was the known dupe of as many of the European princes as paid their court to him under that character. He was more governed by vanity and caprice than principle: and paid no regard to mercy, not even to justice, when it stood in the way of his passions. He persecuted both protestants and papists; and gained the character of a generous and munificent prince, by dividing the spoils of the church, to which he had no right. His whole administration, after he was possessed of those spoils, is a flagrant proof the impotence of law, when opposed to the violence of arbitrary power. But though a tyrant, he, by depressing the nobility, and increasing the property of the commons, had a considerable hand in laying the foundations of civil liberty; and though a bigot to almost every error of the church of Rome, he was the father of the Reformation.

There is an original whole length of her, at Lord Denbigh's, at Newnham Padox. Mr. Walpole has a small one like it, by Holbein. Dr. Ducarel informs me, that the picture of her, on board, in the long Gallery at Lambeth, is much like her print in Larrey's History. The portrait at Windsor, with the King and his Children, is doubtful.

Catharine Parre was widow of Nevil lord Latimer. She was a woman of merit, but very narrowly escaped the block for tampering with religion. She was, presently after the king's decease, married to the lord admiral, brother to the protector Somerset.—The Rev. Mr. Huggett, a very accurate antiquary, has given undoubted authority for the death of this queen, at the castle of Sudley in Gloucestershire, Sept. 5, 1548, and for her interment in the chapel there. These particulars were desiderata in her history, as it appears from Ballard's "Memoirs," p. 96.

MARY, queen of France, and CHARLES BRANDON, duke of Suffolk; G. Vertue sc. From an original in the possession of the late earl of Grenville.—It is now Mr. Walpole's.—On the right hand of the duke of Suffolk is his lance, appendent to which is a label, inscribed,

“ Cloth of gold, do not despise,
 “ Tho' thou be match'd with cloth of frize :
 “ Cloth of frize, be not too bold,
 “ Tho' thou be match'd with cloth of gold.”

Mary queen of France, youngest sister to Henry VIII. was one of the most beautiful women of her age. It is pretty clear that Charles Brandon gained her affections before she was married to Lewis XII. as, soon after the death of that monarch, which was in about three months after his marriage, she plainly told him, that if he did not free her from all her scruples within a certain time, she would never marry him. His casuistry succeeded within the time limited, and she became his wife. This was probably with the king's connivance. It is however certain, that no other subject durst have ventured upon a queen of France, and a sister of the implacable Henry the Eighth. Ob. 1533.

Charles Brandon was remarkable for the dignity and gracefulness of his person, and his robust and athletic constitution. He distinguished himself in tilts and tournaments, the favourite exercises of Henry. He was brought up with that prince, studied his disposition, and exactly conformed to it. That conformity gradually brought on a stricter intimacy; and the king, to bring him nearer to himself, raised him from a private person to a duke. See Clats III.

James V. was a prince of great personal courage, and of uncommon talents for government; but he was not able, with all his prudence and vigour, to wrestle with domestic faction and a foreign enemy at the same time. He died in the flower of his age, of grief, occasioned by the defeat of his army by the English. This was more owing to the divisions which prevailed among the Scots, than to the courage or conduct of the enemy. Ob. 14 Dec. 1542, Æt. 33. He was the author of the famous ballad of "Christ's Kirk on the Green*," to which Mr. Pope alludes in his imitation of the first Epistle of Horace:

Mary, queen of James V. and after his demise Regent of Scotland, was a woman of superior understanding, and of an elevated spirit. Her great qualities were happily tempered with the gentle and the amiable; and she was as engaging as a woman, as she was awful as a queen. But her attachment to her brothers, the Princes of Lorrain, who were rarely checked by conscience, in the career of their ambition, unfortunately betrayed her into some acts of rigour and oppression, that ill suited the gentleness of her nature, and which ended in her being deprived of the regency. Towards the close of her life, she saw and deplored the errors of her conduct; the effects of private affection coinciding with zeal for religion, which prompted her to break the common ties of morality, and the faith which she owed her subjects. Ob. 10. Jun. 1560.

Her daughter Mary, born in an evil hour, lived to experience the advantages and the miseries of royalty, in a still more exquisite degree than her mother.

THOMAS CROMWELL; J. Filian, sc. 4to.

Thomas Cromwell was son of a blacksmith at Putney, and sometime served as a soldier in Italy under the duke of Bourbon. He was afterwards secretary to cardinal Wolfey, and ingratiated himself with Henry VIII. by discovering that the clergy were privately absolved from their oath to him, and sworn anew to the pope. This discovery furnished the king with a pretence for the suppression of monasteries, in which Cromwell was a principal instrument. The king, whose favours, as well as his mercies, were cruel, raised him to a most envied pitch of honour and preferment, a little before his fall. He first amused him with an agreeable prospect, and then pushed him down a precipice. Cromwell, as viceregent, had the precedence of all the great officers of state. Beheaded July 28, 1540*.

* In Stow's "Survey," p. 187, Edit. 1633, is a remarkable instance of his rapine, in seizing on another's property, which shews that he forgot himself after his elevation. But the story of his gratitude to Frescobald, a Florentine merchant, who had been extremely charitable to him when a poor foot-soldier in Italy, and was nobly rewarded when he found him, many years afterwards, in a distressful condition, in the streets of London, tells greatly to his honour. He was tried, and found guilty of high-treason, for bearing arms which his ancestors had publicly borne before, and which himself had often borne in the king's presence. His execution was prevented by the death of the king. When he was above eighty years of age, he appeared, with his usual spirit, at the head of a body of forces, and helped to suppress Wyatt's rebellion.

Edward, duke of Buckingham, son of Henry Stafford, who was beheaded in the reign of Richard III. was restored to his father's honours and estate. He was a distinguished favourite of Henry VIII. whom he attended in his interview with Francis I. and seemed to vie with these monarchs in pomp and splendor. When he was in the height of his glory, his fall was precipitated by some, who are supposed to have regarded him with a jealous eye; and the suspicion fell chiefly upon Wolfey †. He was ac-

He was declared guilty, and executed on Tower-hill the 17th of May, 1521. He was the last who enjoyed the settled post of Lord High Constable of England; an office which, from the power with which it was attended, was alone sufficient to give umbrage to so jealous a prince as Henry VIII.

HENRY GULDEFORDE; Vertue sc. a small oval.

Henry Guldeforde, or Guilford, was one of the greatest ornaments of the court of Henry that Wolsey, who longed to supplant his rival favourite, either from vanity or insolence, dipped his fingers in the basin which the duke had just before held to the king, while he washed his hands: upon which he poured the water into the cardinal's shoes. This so provoked the haughty prelate, that he threatened to sit upon his skirts: which menace occasioned his having no skirts to his coat, when he next appeared in the royal presence. The king asking the reason of this singular appearance, he, with an air of pleasantry, told him, that it was only to disappoint the Cardinal, by putting it out of his power to do as he had threatened.

VIII. In the early part of his life, he served with reputation in the wars with the Moors in Spain under Ferdinand and Isabella. His learning and personal qualities recommended him to the esteem of the great Erasmus, with whom he held a correspondence. In the seventh year of Henry VIII. he was constituted master of the horse for life. *Ob. The great and shining talents of this accomplished nobleman excited the jealousy of Henry, who strongly suspected that he aspired to the crown. He was condemned and executed for high-treason, after the formality of a trial, Jan. 19, 1546 7. His father the duke of Norfolk's head "was upon the block;" but he was happily delivered by the death of the king. The earl of Surrey was famous for the tenderness and elegance of his poetry, in which he excelled all the writers of his time. The fair Geraldine, the name of whose beauty was raised by his pen and his lance, has been proved by Mr. Walpole, from a coincidence of many circumstances, to have been Elizabeth, second daughter of Gerald Fitzgerald, earl of Kildare, by Margaret, daughter of Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorset, and to have been the third wife of Edward Clinton earl of Lincoln.

ARCHIBALD DOUGLASS, Earle of Anguish, (Angus), &c. a small oval belonging to a Set of the Kings of Scotland.

Archibald, Earl of Angus, united the talents of the gentleman, the statesman, and the soldier. Margaret, widow of James IV. and Regent of Scotland, “for her better support,” as Crauford tell us, married this Lord. She had doubtless another inducement: he was the most accomplished of her subjects*. In the minority of James V. his son-in-law, he was one of his Privy Counsellors. In 1521, he was promoted to the high office of Chancellor of Scotland. But afterwards, falling under the king’s displeasure, he was outlawed; and retiring into England, was graciously received by Henry VIII. who took him into his Privy Council. Upon the death of James, he returned to his own country, and his outlawry was annulled by parliament. Wolsey intended to procure copies of all the MS. in the Vatican, for his college at Oxford; which if finished according to his plan, would have been the noblest foundation in the world. He founded the first professorship for the Greek language in that university.

THOMAS WOLSEY, &c. a label proceeding from his mouth, inscribed "Ego, meus et rex;" 4to.

The cardinal has been much censured for his arrogance in this egotism; but any other order of the words would, according to the strictness of the Latin idiom, have been preposterous. Here the schoolmaster seems to have got the better of the courtier*.

Cardinal Wolsey possessed, for some years, all that power and grandeur which could be enjoyed by the greatest favourite, and most absolute minister, under an arbitrary prince. After he was created cardinal, and constituted legate, he exercised as absolute a power in the church, as he did before in the state. His abilities were equal to his great offices; but these were by no means equal to his ambition. He was the only man that ever had the ascendant over Henry; but his friendship for him did not "exceed the love of women:" the violence of that passion was not only too strong for the ties of friendship, but of every law human and divine. Had the cardinal not opposed it, he had perhaps been safe. He fell into disgrace soon after the king's marriage with Anne Bolen. Ob. 29, Nov. 1530. See Class VI.

* There is no head of Wolsey which is not in profile. That which is carved in wood, in the central board of the gateway, which leads to the Butchery of Ipswich, has such an appearance of antiquity, that it is supposed to have been done when he was living: by the side of it is a butcher's knife. It is said that his portraits were done in profile, because he had but one eye. This defect has been imputed, perhaps falsely, to an infamous distemper.

His portrait, at St. John's College in Cambridge is like the old prints.

He is placed here as a cardinal, as his name is on the list of the church of Rome. He may be placed lower, as an English bishop.

This prelate, who was respectable for his unaffected piety, and learning, stood, for some time, very high in the king's favour. But refusing the oath of supremacy, and concealing the treasonable speeches of Elizabeth Barton the famous nun of Kent, he was deprived of his bishopric, thrown into a loathsome prison, and stripped of his very cloaths. When he was reduced to the lowest condition of human nature, the pope created him a cardinal. He was a great lover <sup>1535,</sup> of learning, and a patron of learned men; and was remarkable for learning the Greek language of Erasmus when he was an old man. Beheaded June 22, 1535.

Archbishop Warham shone as a divine, a lawyer, and a statesman, in the reign of Henry VII. with whom he was in great favour; but was supplanted in this reign by Wolsey, who treated him with haughtiness, took every occasion of mortifying him, and even of usurping his privileges. Erasmus makes honourable mention of this prelate, whom he esteemed a perfect model of the episcopal character *. Ob. 23 Aug. 1532.

THOMAS CRANMERUS, archiep. Cant. In Holland's Heroologia; 3vo.

Though Cranmer owed his preferment to the part he acted in the business of the divorce, he was, in every respect, worthy of his high dignity; and has been justly esteemed one of the greatest ornaments of our church and nation. He was, for his learning, sincerity, prudence, and moderation, in high esteem with the king; and possessed a greater share of his confidence than any other prelate of his time, except Wolsey. No higher testimony need to be given of the merit of Colet, than his great intimacy with Erasmus. There was a similitude of manners, of studies, and sentiments in religion, betwixt these illustrious men, who ventured to take off the veil from ignorance and superstition, and expose them to the eyes of the world; and to prepare men's minds for the reformation of religion, and restoration of learning. Erasmus, who did him the honour to call him his master, has given us a hint of his religious sentiments, in his famous colloquy intitled "Peregrinatio Religionis ergo," in which Colet is the person meant under the name of Gratianus Pullus*.

There is a very indifferent portrait of him in the library of Magdalen Hall in Oxford, of which he was a member.

William Tindale, who was deservedly stiled "the English Apostle," was the first that translated the New Testament into English, from the original Greek. This translation was printed at Antwerp, 1526, 8vo. without the translator's name. Three or four years after, he published an English translation of the Pentateuch, from the original Hebrew, and intended to go through the whole Bible. The first impression of the Testament, which gave umbrage to the popish clergy, was bought up at Antwerp in 1527, by order of Tonstall, then bishop of London, and soon after publicly burnt in Cheapside. The sale of this impression enabled the translator to print a larger, and more accurate edition. He was burnt for a heretic at Wilford, near Brussels, 1536*.

JOHN LELAND, some time Canon of King's College, now Christ Church, in Oxford, a most learned Antiquary, and not an inelegant Latin poet †, did great honour to his age and country. He was educated under the famous Lilye, and successively studied at Cambridge, Oxford, and Paris. He was library-keeper to Henry VIII. being perfectly qualified for that office by his great skill in ancient and modern languages, and his extensive knowledge of men and things. His "Collectanea" and his "Itinerary," the manuscripts of which are lodged in the Bodleian library, have been a most copious fund of antiquity, biography, and history to succeeding writers. He spent six years in travelling through the kingdom, being empowered by the king to examine the Libraries of Cathedrals, Colleges, Abbies, and Priors. Hence it was that, at a critical juncture, he ravished almost an infinity of valuable records from dust and oblivion. His vast mind, which had planned greater things than were in the power of one man

* A copy of his Testament in octavo, was sold at the auction of Mr. Jos. Ames's books, 1760, for fourteen guineas and a half. I have been credibly informed, that another copy was sold at the Philobiblian's Library in Piccadilly, for 3s. 6d.

This great man, who was the boast and glory of his country, distinguished himself as a reformer of religion, and restorer of learning. His religion was as remote from the bigotry and persecuting spirit of the age in which he lived, as his learning was from the pedantry and barbarism of the schools. He was much esteemed by the king, and the English nobility, whom he celebrates as the most learned in the world. He lived in the strictest intimacy with More, Lvn-acre, Colet, and Tonsal; and preferred the society of his ingenious and learned friends to that of the greatest princes in Europe, several of whom sought his acquaintance. We find in his works, particularly his Colloquies and Epistles, a more just and agreeable picture of his own times, than is to be met with in any other author, His "Moriæ Encomium," which will ever be admired for the truest wit and humour, is an ample proof of his genius. dared to lash Cardinal Wolsey, which occasioned his taking sanctuary at Westminster Abbey, under the protection of John Islip the Abbot. He died in 1529, and was buried in the church of St. Margaret, Westminster. Erasmus, in an epistle to Henry VIII. styles him, "Britannicarum Literarum Lumen et Decus." It is probable, that if that great and good man had read, and perfectly understood, his "pithy, pleasaunt, and profitable works," as they were lately reprinted, he would have spoken of him in less honourable terms. ### ANNA GRISACRIA.

Sir John More married this lady in his old age.

ALICIA,

Second wife of Sir Thomas More, by whom he had no issue.

MARGARITA ROPERA,

Eldest daughter of Sir Thomas More, married to William Roper, son and heir of John Roper, Esq. prothonotary of the King's Bench.

This lady, who inherited the genius of her father in a very high degree, was not only mistress of the fashionable accomplishments of her sex, but was also a great proficient in languages, arts, and sciences. The parental and filial affection betwixt the father and the daughter, was increased by every principle of endearment that could compose the most perfect friendship. She died in 1544; and was buried, according to her dying request, with her father's head in her arms*.

* Her body is in the Ropers vault, at St Dunstan's church, Canterbury; near which, part of their ancient seat is still remaining. In the wall of this vault is a small niche, where, behind an iron grate, is kept a skull, called Sir Thomas More's, which Mr. Gosling, a learned and worthy clergyman of Canterbury †, informs me he has seen several times, on the opening of the vault for some of the late Sir Edward Dering's family, whose first lady was a descendent of the Ropers.

† I am much obliged to this gentleman, and Mr. Duncombe, another learned and worthy clergyman of the same place, for several useful and curious notices relative to this work.

Second daughter of Sir Thomas More, married to John Dancy, son and heir to Sir John Dancy.

CÆCILIA HERONIA,

Third daughter to Sir Thomas More, married to Giles Heron of Shacklewell, in Middlesex, Esq.

JO. MORUS,

Only son of Sir Thomas More. His father's jest in regard to his capacity is well known: there was undoubtedly more wit than truth in it, as Erasmus speaks of him as a youth of great hopes *, and has inscribed to him his account of the works of Aristotle †

HENRICUS PATENSONUS, Morio, &amp;c.

Fool to Sir Thomas, who would sometimes descend to little buffooneries himself. "Vale More, (says Erasmus to him) et Moriam tuam gnauiter defende ‡." After his resignation of the great seal, he gave this fool to "my lord-mayor, and his successors." The proverbial saying of "my lord mayor's fool," probably Patenson, is too well known to be repeated here. Sir Thomas More's children, and their families, lived in the same house with him at Chelsea.

HENRY VIII. &c. Defender of the Faith; 4to.

I have placed Henry VIII. as an author, at the head of the learned men of this reign *; a place which that vain prince would probably have taken himself, with as little ceremony as he did that of Head of the Church. He was author of the "Assertion of the seven Sacraments," against Martin Luther, for which he had the title of Defender of the Faith †. This book was first printed in 1521. He was also the reputed author of the "Primer" which goes under his name, and of the "Institution of a Christian Man." This book, which is in Latin, is most probably not of the king's composition, but the joint work of several eminent clergymen ‡.

PHYSICIANS.

† It is probable that bishop Fisher had a great hand in this work.

‡ Henry should not only be remembered as an author, but as one skilled in music, and a composer. "An Anthem of his composition is sometimes sung at Christ-church cathedral: it is what is called a full Anthem, without any Solo part, and the harmony is good." Barrington's "Observations on the Statutes," &c. p. 448, 3d edit. Erasmus, in his Epistles informs us, that he could not only justly sing his part, but that he composed a service of four, five, or six parts.

This portrait is fronting the seventh chapter of the following book: "The introduction of knowledge, the which dothe teache a man to speake part of all manner of languages, and to know the usage and fashon of all maner of countries: Dedycated to the right honourable and gracious lady, Mary, daughter of king Henry the Eyght." Black letter, imprinted by William Coplande, without date.

Before the first chapter in which he has characterized an Englishman, is a wooden print of a naked man, with a piece of cloth hanging on his right arm, and a pair of sheers in his left hand. Under the print is an inscription in verse. These are the four first lines:

"I am an Englishman and naked I stand here,
 "Musing in my mynde what rayment I shall were:
 "For now I will were thys, and now I will were that,
 "And now I will were, I cannot tell what, &c."

Our author Borde is thus hinted at, in the homily "Against Excesse of Apparell." A certain man that would picture every country-man in his accustomed apparell, when he had painted other nations, he pictured the Englishman all naked, &c." He was also author of "The Breviary of Health *;" "The Tales of the Mad Men of Gotham †," &c. See an account of him in Hearne's Appendix to his preface to "Benedictus Abbas Petroburgensis."

THOMAS MORUS, &c. very neatly engraved, dedicated to the chancellor of Liege, by Jo. Valder, 1621, 12mo.

Sir Thomas More was a great master of the elegant learning of the ancients †. His "Utopia," a kind of political romance, which gained him the highest reputation as an author, is an idea of a perfect republic, in an island supposed to be newly discovered in America. As this was the age of discoveries, it was taken for true history by the learned Budæus, and others; who thought it highly expedient, that missionaries should be sent to convert so wise a people to christianity ‡. Holbein, who may be deemed a self-taught genius, was a celebrated painter of history and portrait, in this, and the following reign. Mr. Ames informs us, that he and his numerous servants performed all parts of the printing business; and that the most ancient printers were also bookbinders and booksellers. The two latter branches, were carried on, at least, under their inspection. The same author adds, that he "cut a new set of punches, which he " sunk into matrices, and cast several sorts of " printing-letters, which he afterwards used; " and Mr. Palmer the printer says, the same are " used by all the printers in London to this " day, and believes they were struck from his " punches *."

Richard Grafton was born in London, and flourished in the reigns of Henry VIII. Edward VI. Mary, and Elizabeth. In his own name were published "An Abridgement of the Chronicles of England," and "A Chronicle, and large meere history of the Affayers of England, and Kinges of the same; deduced from the Creation of the World," &c. 1569. His rebus is a tun, and a grafted tree growing through it. The head of Grafton, and that of the next person, are in Ames's History. The author has, with great industry, compiled catalogues of books printed by the artificans whom he has commemorated.

REYNOLD WOLF, Esq. King's printer; an oval within a square cut in wood.

Wolf, who was a German or a Swiss, was a great collector of antiquities, and furnished Ralph Holinshed, who was one of his executors, with the bulk of the materials for his "Chronicle." He made his will the 9th of January, 1573-4, and probably died soon after. His device was the Brafen Serpent, which was also his sign.

The books printed by these, and other old printers, have of late years, been eagerly bought up, at immoderate prices; and for the most part, by capricious collectors, who regarded Caxton and Wynken as highly as Tom Folio is said to have esteemed Aldus and Elzevir *

* Tatler, No. 158.

Some have preposterously considered these books as golden mines of English literature, whose contents our modern writers have been continually draining, refining, and beating thin, to display with pomp and ostentation. But there are several learned and ingenious gentlemen, whom I could name, who have turned over our books in the black letter to some purpose, and have, by their help, illustrated Shakespear, and other celebrated writers.

Will. Sommers was some time a servant in the family of Richard Farmor, Esq. of Elton Neston, in Northamptonshire, ancestor to the earl of Pomfret. This gentleman was found guilty of a præmunire in the reign of Henry VIII. for sending eight pence, and a couple of shirts, to a priest, convicted of denying the king's supremacy, who was then a prisoner in the goal at Buckingham. The rapacious monarch seized whatever he was possessed of, and reduced him to a state of miserable dependance. Will. Sommers, touched with compassion for his unhappy master, is said to have dropped some expressions in the king's last illness, which reached the conscience of that merciless prince, and to have caused the remains of his estate, which had been much dismembered, to be restored to him.

works of this poet, which contain little beside coarse obscenity and low ribaldry, were reprinted in octavo, 1736.

I shall here, and at the end of most of the subsequent reigns, take occasion to introduce a few remarks on the dress and fashions of the times, as they occur to me, without any design of being particular.

In the reign of Richard II. the peaks, or tops, of shoes and boots were worn of so enormous a length, that they were tied to the knees*. A law was made in the same reign, to limit them to two inches.

We are informed, by several antiquaries, that in the time of Anne, Richard's Queen, the women of quality first wore trains, which occasioned a well meaning author to write "contra Caudas Dominarum †." The same queen introduced side-saddles ‡. Before, the English ladies rode as the French do at present; and as it is presumed the English will again, if some woman of beauty, rank, and spirit, one of the charioteers for instance, should set the example §. Ladies who throw a whip, and manage a pair of horses to admiration, would doubtless ride a single one with equal grace and dexterity. It is strange that, in a polished age, the French have not been followed in so safe, so natural, and so convenient a practice.

YOUNG.

The variety of dresses worn in the reign of Henry the Eighth, may be concluded from the print of the naked Englishman, holding a piece of cloth, and a pair of shears, in Borde's "Introduction to Knowledge*." The dress of the king and the nobles, in the beginning of this reign, was not unlike that worn by the yeomen of the guard at present. This was probably aped by inferior persons. It is recorded, "that Anne Bolen wore yellow mourning for Catharine of Arragon †."

As far as I have been able to trace the growth of the beard from portraits, and other remains of antiquity, I find that it never flourished more in England, than in the century preceding the Norman Conquest. That of Edward the Confessor was remarkably large, as appears from his seal in Speed's "Theatre of Great Britain." After the Conqueror took possession of the kingdom beards became unfashionable, and were probably looked upon as badges of disloyalty, as the Normans wore only whiskers. It is said, that the English spies took those invaders for an army of priests, as they appeared to be without beards.

Both these prints represent him older, than when he was in England.

Charles V. emperor of Germany, and king of Spain, is said to have been a great politician at sixteen years of age. But it is certain that his genius, which was solid and very extraordinary, was not of the quickest growth. His wars, and his vast designs, which were known to every one conversant with history, are now better known than ever, by the work of an historian that does the greatest honour to the Scots nation. He came to England twice in this reign, to visit the king, to whom he paid his court as the arbiter of Europe; as Henry then held the balance betwixt him, and Francis I. of France. Tired of those active and busy scenes in which he had been long engaged, he, in the latter part of his life, resigned his kingdoms to his brother and his son, and retired into a monastery. He was thought to have been very strongly inclined to the religion which he persecuted*. Some days before his death, he commanded his funeral procession to pass before him in the same order as it did after his decease. Ob. 21 Sept. 1558. Ferdinand was brother to Charles V. and his successor in the empire. He was elected Knight of the Garter, the 23d of April, 1522, when he was archduke of Austria, and king of the Romans. Though, from the spirit of the times, his engagements with Charles, and the necessity of his affairs, he was frequently impelled to war, he was more inclined to cultivate the arts of peace, which were better suited to the gentleness of his disposition. It must, however, be acknowledged, that his rigorous treatment of Prague was an instance of severity, more suitable to the sternness of his brother's character than his own natural temper, and that it did him no honour. He died in 1564, and on the 2d of October, there was a solemn obsequy for him in St. Paul's Church, London.

William de Croy, lord of Chievres, who descended from the blood royal of Hungary, was a man of letters, a good soldier, and an able politician. He was perfectly qualified to superintend the education of a prince, and was, by the Emperor Maximilian, appointed governor of his grandson Charles. But his great and shining qualities were debased and sullied by a sordid avarice; to gratify which passion he too long kept the young prince in a state of pupilage. In 1515, he was sent by him into England, in the quality of ambassador, to renew the treaties which his predecessors had made with that crown. Charles, whose gratitude was one of his excellencies, raised him to great honours. He died the 28th of May, 1521.

occasions, acquitted himself with honour as an ambassador; particularly in his embassy to Henry VIII from the whole body of protestants in France. His "Commentaries," written with candor, spirit, and politeness, is the most considerable of his works. We are told, in the "Life of Dr. Swift *," that this was one of the books which he read at Moor Park, and that he took from it large extracts. It was probably recommended to him by Sir William Temple, who was eminently read in history. The author died in 1556 †.

Grynæus, who studied at Oxford about the year 1532, was eminent for his skill in the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages; and for his knowledge in philosophy and the mathematics. Mr. Wood informs us, that when he left the kingdom, he made no scruple of carrying away several Greek books with him, which he had taken from the libraries in Oxford, because he saw the owners were careless of them ‡. He was intimate with Erasmus, and was present with that excellent man when he died. He pub-

"Brian Twyne's Apologia," lib. 3. sect. 312. is referred to on that occasion; but nothing there occurs that will warrant such reflections. It is sufficient to refer the reader to Grynæus's Epistle Dedicatory to John More, where the author has apologized for himself. ANDREAS GERARDUS HYPERIUS;
in Boissard, 410.

Hyperius, a man of great learning, and one of the best divines, and most elegant writers of his age, which was also the age of Erasmus, was a native of Ipres in Flanders. Having been strongly suspected of what was called heresy, he came over to England, in the year 1536, or 7, where he lived above four years in happy retirement with Charles lord Montjoy, a man of letters, of whom Erasmus hath made honourable mention in his works. He was afterwards professor of divinity at Marpurg, in Germany, where he died, the 1st of Feb. 1564. Verheiden says that his printed works in divinity, and the sciences, would make seven volumes in folio. Dr. Atterbury has mentioned him as a divine of authority, at p. 52, of the preface to his Sermon, preached at the funeral of Thomas Bennet, some passages of which had been objected to in an anonymous pamphlet, by Hoadly.

HENRICUS CORNELIUS AGRIPPA, Medicus et Jurisconsultus: In Boissard, 410.

Henry Cornelius Agrippa, who was born at Cologne, in 1486, was a man of a prodigious compass of knowledge. He was careful to inform himself of every science; and saw, or pretended to see, the vanity of them all. Happy had it been for him, if he could have seen the vanity of Alchymy, before he was the dupe of that fallacious philosophy, and before he had seduced others, who were as great dupes as himself. He was celebrated throughout Europe;
and

and was long a wanderer through many parts of it; eager in pursuit of fortune, which he never overtook, and promising himself mountains of gold, which evaporated in smoke. The history of his life, as recorded by Bayle and Schellhorne*, is interesting and curious: sometimes we find him, in all the pride of literature, in schools and universities; at other times, in courts and camps; in the shops of projecting mechanics, and in the laboratories of hermetic philosophers. Now he is courted as a prodigy of knowledge; and then shunned and detested as a forcerer, and his very dog is dreaded as an evil demon†. He was in England, in 1510; and in 1529, received an invitation from Henry VIII. to settle here, which he thought proper to decline. He died in 1535. The most celebrated of his works, which are in Latin, are his Treatises “Of Occult Philosophy ‡,” and “Of the Vanity of Sciences:” the latter, which is a frivolous book, has been greatly improved upon

* See his “Amœnitates Literariæ,” tom. ii. p. 553, &c. and the authors referred to in Jortin’s “Life of Erasmus,” vol. i. p. 533.

† That which contributes most to the opinion that Cornelius Agrippa was a magician, is an impertinent piece published under his name, entitled the fourth book “De Occulta Philosophia,” which that learned man was never the author of. For it is not to be found in the folio edition of his works, in which only those that are genuine and truly his are contained. Prideaux’s “Connection,” &c. Part i. Book iv. p. 313, notes, edit. 1729.

‡ Many weak heads have been bewildered by this book. I knew an old gentleman, who, upon the perusal of it in the English translation, fancied himself a magician, and an adept, and that riches and power were within his grasp. He declared to me, that he would not leave this treasure to any man who did not know how to value it; but bequeathed it to a relation, who was not so far gone in the celestial sciences as to be above all worldly considerations; and who presently sold it for waste paper, as many others have done since: such is the fate of a work, which hath been thought to contain a mine of gold, and which once engaged the attention of the learned world. It is now scarce, and is valued as a curiosity.

He lived in the strictest intimacy with the cardinals Bembo and Pole, especially with the latter, who closed his eyes at Padua, where he died, in 1522, in the 34th year of his age. His Latin Commentaries on Pliny's Book of Plants, and on the Civil Law, are sufficient testimony of his learning; and his oration in praise of Lewis XII. and the French nation, a signal proof of his eloquence. Ignatio Loyola, a Spanish gentleman, who was dangerously wounded at the siege of Pampeluna, having heated his imagination by reading "The lives of the Saints," which were brought him in his illness instead of a romance, conceived a strong ambition to be the founder of a religious order: this is well known by the appellation of the Society of Jesus †. Many of the members of this body, which hath been ever above the sour and sordid austerities of the lower monastic orders, have acted as if they thought that Christ's kingdom was of this world, and have aimed at being his prime ministers. It should also be remembered, that prevaricating and pernicious casuists, intriguing politicians, embroilers of kingdoms, and assassins of kings, have been of the same fraternity. The innocent founder hath been unjustly branded for the crimes of his degenerate sons. PETRUS RONSARDUS, &c. in Boisfard, small 4to.

Peter Ronfard applied himself late to study; but by the acuteness of his genius, and continual application, he made ample amends for the time he had lost. Though he formed himself upon the Greek and Latin Classics, scarce any author, at least of his day, has a more original and natural air. He possessed judgment and fire in an extraordinary degree: hence it is that Thuanus, who was partially fond of him, prefers him to any poet since the Augustan age. He, like other old poets, hath been censured for his peculiarities: he might, perhaps, as well have been blamed for wearing an antiquated dress; which was owing more to the prevailing fashion of the times, than the caprice or affectation

The duke of Somerset, ancestor of the present duke of Somerset and earl of Hertford, was lord-protector of the kingdom, lord high-treasurer, and earl-marshal, in this reign. Though his administration was not without blemishes, his conduct was generally regulated by justice and humanity. He repealed the sanguinary and tyrannical laws of Henry VIII. and by gentle and prudent methods promoted the great work of the Reformation. Such was his love of equity, that he erected a court of requests in his own house, to hear and redress the grievances of the poor. His attachment to the reformed religion, but much more his envied greatness drew upon him the resentment of the factious nobility, at the head of whom was his own brother the lord-admiral, and John Dudley earl of Warwick *. He caused the former to be beheaded, and was soon after brought to the block himself, by the intrigues of the latter, to whose crooked politics, and ambitious views, he was the greatest obstacle. He attended Henry VIII. at the sieges of Terouenne and Boulogne, at the former of which, he, at the head of two hundred and fifty Reformadoes, recovered a piece of ordnance from ten thousand French, under the count de St. Paul. At the coronation of Edward VI. he was appointed lord high-steward of England for that day; and in the same year, he had a grant of the monastery of Woburn in Bedfordshire, which is now the seat of the present duke of Bedford, who is lineally descended from him. Ob. 1554. John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, was earl-marshal, and lord high-admiral. He was a man of parts, courage, and enterprize; but fraudulent, unjust, and of unrelenting ambition. He had the address to prevail with Edward VI. to violate the order of succession, and settle the crown upon his daughter-in-law, the lady Jane Grey. Several historians speak of him as the greatest subject that ever was in England. He was executed for rebellion, in the first year of queen Mary. It has been observed, that he had eight sons, of whom none had any lawful issue*. See Class, VII.

TOMASO SEIMOR, Ammiraglio d'Inghilterra, 12mo. In Leti's "Elisabetta." It should be remembered here, that the authenticity of most of the portraits in this book is as questionable as the author's facts.

Thomas Seymour, baron of Sudley and lord-admiral of England, was a younger brother of the protector Somerset. He was a man of a good person and address; and no stranger to the arts of the courtier, or the gallantry of the lover. The impression which he made on the heart of Catharine Parre, whom he married, and on that of the princess Elizabeth, whom he would have married, was, by credulous people, in a credulous age, imputed to incantation. His love seems to have been only a secondary passion, that was subservient to his ambition*. His views were certainly aspiring; and he was justly regarded by his brother as an active and dangerous rival. He was executed in consequence of an act of attainder, without even the formality of a trial, the 9th of March, 1548-9. Mr. Warton in his "Life of Sir Thomas Pope," has given us a curious account of some coquetries which passed betwixt the princess Elizabeth and the lord-admiral.

GULIELMUS HERBERTUS, comes Pembrochiæ; in the "Heroologia;" 8vo.

There is a portrait of him in the delivery of the charter of Bridewell, in the preceding Class.

This nobleman was esquire of the body to Henry VIII. a privy-counsellor, and one of the executors of that king's will. He was nearly allied to Henry, by his marriage with Anne, sister to Catharine Parre. He was, in this reign, constituted master of the horse, elected a knight of the Garter, and created earl of Pembroke. In the reign of Mary, he was appointed general of the forces raised to suppress Wyatt's rebellion, and had the command of the army sent to defend Calais. He was lord-steward of the household, in the reign of Elizabeth. Ob. 1569, Æt. 63. His head may be placed in the last mentioned reign.

THOMAS CRANMER, archbishop of Canterbury, without inscription; engraved after Holbein: Celari f. Guil. Cartwright, b. sb.

There is a good head of him, after Holbein, in Thoroton's "Nottinghamshire;" fol.

Archbishop Cranmer proceeded by gentle steps to promote the Reformation, under Edward VI. Though he was in his nature averse from violent and sanguinary measures in the establishment of religion; he was transported beyond his usual moderation in one instance, and went so far as to persuade the king, much against his inclination, to sign the warrant for the burning of Joan Bocher for heresy. This woman held, "that Christ was not truly incarnate of the Virgin: whose flesh being the outward man, was sinfully begotten, and born in sin, and consequently he could take none of it: but that the Word, by the consent of

This pious and learned prelate, who was indefatigable in his labour to promote the Reformation, had a considerable hand in the Liturgy of the Church of England, which was first compiled, and read in churches, by command of Edward VI. There was a second edition published, with many alterations, in this reign. Both these are to be seen in Hamon L’Estrange’s “Alliance of Divine Offices, or Collection of

STEPHEN GARDINER, bishop of Winchester, was imprisoned in the Fleet, and afterwards in the Tower, in this reign. Thomas Goodrich, who was some time a pensioner of Bennet College in Cambridge, and afterwards a fellow of Jesus College, in that university, was an eminent divine and civilian. He was one of the revisers of the translation of the New Testament; and a commissioner for reforming the ecclesiastical laws, in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. who employed him in several embassies. He had a hand in compiling the Liturgy, and "The Institution of a Christian Man." In 1551, he was promoted to the high office of chancellor. Upon the accession of Mary, he resigned the seals to Stephen Gardiner, bishop of Winchester; but found means, though he had been zealous for the Reformation, to retain his bishopric. This drew upon him a suspicion of temporizing in favour of popery. He died the 10th of May, 1554.

This worthy prelate was a celebrated preacher at court, in the reign of Edward VI. when there were no sermons but in the principal churches, and upon some particular fasts and festivals. John Bale was bishop of Ossory ‡ in Ireland, and author of "Catalogus Scriptorum illustrium Brytanniæ, Basil. 1557," fol. He was also author of "A Comedy, or Interlude, of Johan Baptyft's Preachynge in the Wilder-ness; opening thè Crafts of Hypocrytes," &c. 4to. 1558: It is printed in the "Harleian Miscellany."

He hath given us a detail of all his dramatic pieces, which were written when he was a papist. There was a time when the lamentable comedies of Bale were acted with applause. He tells us, in the account of his vocation to the bishopric of Ossory, that his comedy of John Baptist's Preaching, and his tragedy of God's Promises, were acted by young men at the Market-cross of Kilkenny, upon a Sunday. Surely this tragedy must be as extraordinary a composition, in its kind, as his comedies.

The intemperate zeal of this author often carries him beyond the bounds of decency and candour in his accounts of the papists. Anthony Wood styles him "the foul-mouthed Bale;".

* Mr. Oldys, author of the Dissertation on Pamphlets, in the "Phoenix Britannicus," 4to. p. 558, says, that he has known Bale's Examination, &c. of Sir John Oldcastle, sell for three guineas, on account of its rarity. This is to be understood of the first edition.

Peter Martyr, some time prior of St. Fridian in the city of Lucca, fled from his native country on account of the protestant religion, and took shelter in Switzerland, whence he was, in 1547, invited to England by the protector Somerset, and archbishop Cranmer. He was, the next year, made Regius Professor of Divinity; and in 1550, installed canon of Christ Church. His numerous works, which are in Latin, consist chiefly of commentaries on the Scriptures, and pieces of controversy. He desired leave to withdraw soon after the accession of Mary, and died at Zurich 12 Nov. 1562. His study, which he erected for privacy in his garden, was pulled down by Dr. Aldrich, when he was canon of Christ Church.

For though the law of the church was, that in such a case, he should take the order of priesthood within one year after his institution; yet that was frequently dispensed with. Indeed there is no appearance of evidence for this person's having been in holy orders; and it is presumed that Strype in the life of him, page 41, was the first that suggested his "being at least in deacon's orders;" a suggestion that probably arose from his not being able otherwise to account for the spiritual preferments which he enjoyed.

The duke of Somerset made too great a figure as a soldier, to be omitted here; as he never shone more in any station than at the head of an army. He defeated the Scots at the memorable battle of Muffelburgh, in which 14000 of the enemy were killed. This was so total an overthrow, that they could never recover it.

There is a very scarce pamphlet of his expedition into Scotland, which hath been sold for four guineas, though the whole of it is printed in Hollinshed. See "Phoenix Britannicus," p. 558. I mention this as an instance of literary insanity.

* He is supposed to have been in holy orders, as he held a canonry of the King's College, afterwards called Christ Church, in 1543. See Fasti Oxon. vol. i. col. 68. But Dr. Birch speaks of lay-deans in his "Life of Prince Henry," p. 14. If a deanry might be held by a layman, so might a prebend, or canonry.

JOHN DUDLEY, earl of Warwick, an excellent soldier, was lieutenant-general under the duke of Somerset, in the expedition to Scotland, and had a principal share in the victory at Musselburgh. Sir John Hayward tells us, "that for enterprizes by arms, he was the minion of this time." Hist. Edw. VI. p. 15. See Class II.

Sir THOMAS CHALONER. See a description of his portrait, Class IX.

This gallant soldier attended Charles V. in his wars; particularly in his unfortunate expedition to Algiers. Soon after the fleet left that place, he was shipwrecked on the coast of Barbary, in a very dark night; and having exhausted his strength by swimming, he chanced to strike his head against a cable, which he had the presence of mind to catch hold of with his teeth; and with the loss of several of them, was drawn up by it into the ship to which he belonged. The duke of Somerset, who was an eye-witness of his distinguished bravery at Musselburgh, rewarded him with the honour of knighthood.

Sir

Sir Thomas Smith, when he was Greek lecturer at Cambridge, assisted by his learned friend Mr. Cheke, first introduced the true pronunciation of that language; upon which he wrote a treatise in Latin. Flashed with his success, he set about reforming the English alphabet and orthography. He composed an alphabet of twenty-nine letters, of which nineteen were Roman, four Greek, and six English, or Saxon. His general rule in orthography was to write all words as they are pronounced, without the least regard to their derivation*. This project has been generally looked upon as chimerical. His book on the Commonwealth of England, is esteemed a just account of the English constitution, as it was in the reign of Elizabeth.

There are many ingenious, as well as whimsical and fabulous things in his works, which were printed at Lyons, in ten volumes, fol. 1663. Though the abilities of Philip were more adapted to the cabinet than the field, he was generally the dupe of his own politics. His ambition ever prompted him to enterprises which he had neither courage nor address to execute. He was so far from using his influence to restrain, that he actually bore a part in the cruelties of this reign, and entered into persecution with the spirit of a grand inquisitor. The most memorable of his actions was the victory at St. Quintin, in which the English had a considerable share. He is said to have built the Escorial, in consequence of a vow which he made at that time †.

* The following description of Philip's person, which may be considered as a sketch from the life, is in John Elder's letter to Robert Stuarde, Bishop of Cathnes, 1555 †. "Of visage he is well favoured, with a broad forehead and grey eyes, streight nosed, and manly countenance. From the forehead to the point of his chynne, his face groweth small; his pace is princely, and gate so streight and upright, as he lefeth no inch of his higthe; with a yeallowe head, and a yeallowe berde: and thus to conclude; he is so well proportioned of bodi, arme, legge, and every other limme to the same, as nature cannot worke a more parfite paterne: and, as I have learned, of the age of xxviii. years; whose majesty I judge to be of a stout stomake, pregnaut witted, and of moit gentel nature."

† This immense pile by no means merits the encomiums which have been generally given it. It is indeed venerable for its greatness, but it is a greatness without magnificence. It is too low in proportion to its extent, and consequently appears heavy.

"Pole, which is prefixed to the first part of this work, and represents him as advanced in years, that it is attributed to Raphael, who died in the year 1520, when the Cardinal was only in the 20th year of his age. But the objectors did not reflect, that besides Raphael of Urbino, who died in the year they mention, there were several other great masters of that name. To go no farther than Raphael del Colle Bergese, who flourished chiefly whilst Cardinal Pole was in Italy; and the prime of whose life coincides with the decline of the cardinal's*. He was one of the most celebrated artists under Giulio Romano." Dr. Ducarel informs me, that the portrait of the cardinal at Lambeth nearly resembles the head in the "Heroologia †." † The following note is from the same learned and communicative gentleman. The long Gallery at Lambeth palace, and several of the adjoining apartments were built by Cardinal Pole. In this gallery, and the great dining-room next to it, is a picture of every archbishop of Canterbury from Warham to the present. The fine portrait of Warham, painted by Holbein, was by him presented to that prelate, together with the portrait of Erasmus; and these two pictures passed by will of Warham and his successors, till they came to archbishop Laud; after whose death they were missing, till the time of Sancroft, who had the good fortune to recover that of Warham. Sir John Harrington tells us, that "when Bonner was shewn this print in the book of Martyrs on purpose to vex him, he laughed at it, saying, "A vengeance on the fool, how could he get my picture drawn so right *?" There is another print of him in that book burning a man's hands with a candle.

This man, whom nature seems to have designed for an executioner, was an ecclesiastical judge, in the reign of Mary. He is reported to have condemned no less than two hundred innocent persons to the flames; and to have caused great numbers to suffer imprisonment, racks, and tortures. He was remarkably fat and corpulent; which made one say to him, that he was "full of guts, but empty of bowels." But see an aggravated description of Horn's person in Pir's "De Illust. Angliæ Scriptoribus." p. 797.

Stephen

Stephen Gardiner, lord-chancellor, and prime minister in this reign, was distinguished for his extensive learning, insinuating address, and profound policy; the master-piece of which was the treaty of marriage betwixt Philip and Mary, which was an effectual bar to the ambitious designs of Philip *. His religious principles appear to have been more flexible than his political, which were invariably fixed to his own interest. He was a persecutor of those tenets to which he had subscribed, and in defence of which he had written. He was author of a treatise "De Vera Obedientia," and had a great hand in the famous book intitled "The Erudition of a Christian Man." He also wrote an "Apology for Holy Water," &c. Ob. 1555.

* There is no question but Philip intended, if possible, to make himself master of the kingdom, by marrying Mary. When the queen was supposed to be far advanced in her pregnancy, Philip applied to the parliament to be constituted regent, during the minority of the child, and offered to give ample security to surrender the regency, when he, or she, should be of age to govern. The motion was warmly debated in the house of peers, and he was like to carry his point, when the lord Paget stood up, and said, "Pray who shall sue the king's bond?" This laconic speech had its intended effect, and the debate was soon concluded in the negative †.

This venerable prelate, worn out with labour, old age, imprisonment, walked thus equipped to his trial, and probably to the place of execution. When he was chained to the stake, two bags of gunpowder were fastened under his arms, the explosion of which presently put an end to his life. While he was burning, a large quantity of blood gushed from his heart, as if all the blood in his body had been drawn to that part*. He was burnt 16 Oct. 1555.—He had a principal hand in composing the Homilies, in which he was assisted by Cranmer, with whom he usually resided at Lambeth, during the reign of Edward VI. faned by superstition and idolatry. The archbishop would by no means dispense with his wearing the episcopal habits: Hooper was determined not to wear these odious vestments; and was ordered to prison till he should think proper to submit. After much altercation, Peter Martyr, and other foreign divines, were consulted, and the matter was brought to a compromise: he was to be consecrated in the robes, and to wear them only in his cathedral. This is the æra of the multiplied controversies in relation to caps, gowns, and other clerical habits. When he was chained at the stake, a pardon, on condition of his recantation, was placed on a stool before him. Both his legs were consumed before the flame touched his vitals. JOANNES BRADEFORDUS, Mar. in the "Heroologia;" 8vo.

John Bradford, who descended from a genteel family at Manchester, was some time a clerk, or deputy, under Sir John Harington, who was, by Henry VIII. and Edward VI. appointed treasurer and paymaster of the forces at Boloign, and of the workmen employed in the fortifications of that place. Whilst he was in this post, he yielded to a temptation, which offered itself, of under or over-charging some article in his accounts, by which the king was a considerable loser. Some time after, he was so deeply affected with a sermon of Latimer upon Restitution, that he resolved to restore the whole sum of which he had defrauded the king; and he strictly adhered to this resolution. When his mind had in some measure recovered its tranquillity, he sedulously applied himself to the study of divinity, took the degree of master of arts at Cambridge, and became one of the most eminent preachers of his time. His piety was in the highest degree exemplary, his labours incessant, his zeal was tempered with meekness, his charity was, on every occasion, extended even to his enemies; his whole life after his conversion, and especially his calm resignation to the flames, is a striking instance of the force of

of the religious principle. He was burnt in Smithfield, the first of July, 1555. The long imprisonment and cruel usage of this meek and pious martyr is alone sufficient to blacken the reign of Mary. He is placed here as prebendary of St. Paul's.

JOHANNES ROGERSIUS. In the Heroologia; 8vo.

John Rogers, who was the first martyr in this reign, was indefatigable in his ministerial labours, and of a most exemplary character in every relation of life. He had strong attachments to the world, having an amiable wife, and ten children. Though he knew that his death approached, he still maintained his usual serenity; and was waked out of a sound sleep, when the officers came to carry him to the stake*. In the reign of Henry VIII. he translated the whole Bible, which he published under the fictitious name of Thomas Matthew †. Ob. 4 Feb. 1555-6.

He, as treasurer of the court of augmentations of the king's revenues, was ranked with the great officers of the crown. Though he owed his fortune to the dissolution of monasteries, in consequence of which several grants were made him by the king, and some advantageous purchases by himself, he, however, kept clear of fraud and rapine when they paved the way to rank and fortune. He did not, at an age of debility and dotage bequeath, but in the full vigour of his understanding, and in the prime of life, gave a great part of his ample fortune for the foundation of a college, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, a society which hath long reflected honour upon its founder. ### REMARKS ON DRESS, &c.

I have before observed, that much the same kind of dress which was worn by Henry VIII. in the former part of his reign, is now worn by the yeomen of the guard. It is no less remarkable, that the most conspicuous and distinguishing part of a cardinal's habit, which has been banished from England ever since the death of cardinal Pole, is also now worn by the lowest order of females, and is called a cardinal.

I take the reign of Mary to be the æra of ruffs and farthingales †, as they were first brought hither from Spain. Howel tells us in his "Letters," that the Spanish word for a farthingale literally translated, signifies cover-infant, as if it was intended to conceal pregnancy. It is perhaps of more honourable extraction, and might signify cover-infanta.

brought

A blooming virgin in this age seems to have been more solicitous to hide her skin, than a shrivelled old woman is at present. The very neck was generally concealed; the arms were covered quite to the wrists; the petticoats were worn long, and the head-gear, or coiffure, close; to which was sometimes fastened a light veil, which fell down behind, as if intended occasionally to conceal even the face.

If I may depend on the authority of engraved portraits, the beard extended and expanded itself more during the short reigns of Edward VI. and Mary, than from the Conquest to that period. Bishop Gardiner has a beard long and streaming like a comet. The beard of cardinal Pole is thick and bushy; but this might possibly be Italian. The patriarchal beard, as I find it in the tapestries of those times, is both long and large; but this seems to have been the invention of the painters, who drew the Cartoons. This venerable appendage to the face, was formerly greatly regarded. Though learned authors have written for and against almost every thing, I never saw any thing written against the beard. The pamphlets on the "Unloveliness of Love-locks," and the "Mischief of long Hair," made much noise in the kingdom, in the reign of Charles I.

FERDINANDUS ALVARES, Toletanus, Dux Alvæ, &c. *In a round. In Meteranus's "Historia Belgica *."*

Ferdinando Alvares, of Toledo, duke of Alva, a name "damned to eternal fame," for his cruelties in the Low Countries, was a most apt and ready instrument for a tyrant. He frequently executed with all the rage of a soldier, what his master had pre-determined in cool blood. Philip's counsels and Alva's conduct, which seem to have perfectly coincided, kindled such a war, and produced such a revolt, as is scarce to be paralleled in the history of mankind. He died, according to Thuanus, in 1582, aged 77 years.

MARGARITA AUSTRIACA, Ducessa Parmæ, &c. Van Sichem sc. small b. ß.

Margaret of Austria, duchess of Parma and Placentia, and governess of the Low Countries for king Philip, was, together with the duchess of Lorraine, dispatched into England in this reign. They were commanded to bring back with them, into Flanders, the princess Elizabeth, betwixt whom and the duke of Savoy, Philip, for political reasons, had projected a match. The queen, who had been frequently slighted by him, and was probably jealous of the duchess of Lorraine, with whom he was HADRIANUS JUNIUS; Larmessin sc. 4to.

Hadrianus Junius, one of the most polite and universal scholars of his age, was a considerable time in England, where he composed several of his learned works; particularly his "Greek and Latin Dictionary," to which he added above six thousand five hundred words, and dedicated it to Edward VI. He was retained as physician to the duke of Norfolk, and afterwards, as monsieur Bayle informs us, to a great lady. He wrote various books of philology, and criticism, notes on ancient authors, a book of poems, &c. in Latin. His "Epithalamium on Philip and Mary" was published in 1554. Ob. 16 June, 1575. Æt. 64.

* Mr. Warton, at p. 58 of this book, mentions a satirical print of her which I never saw. It represents her naked, wrinkled, and haggard, and several Spaniards sucking her: beneath are legends, intimating that they had sucked her to skin and bone, and enumerating the presents she had lavished upon Philip. Mary was highly incensed at this impudent pasquinade.

HISTORICAL PIECES, &c.

Queen ELIZABETH, going in procession to lord Hunsdon's house in Hertfordshire, circ. A. 1580. Marc. Garrard p. Vertue sc. 1742; large sh.

In this print are the portraits of the earl of Leicester, Henry lord Hunsdon, Wm. lord Burleigh, Charles lord Howard, afterwards earl of Nottingham; lady Hunsdon, Elizabeth sister to lord Hunsdon, and wife of lord Howard, &c. The painting was mistaken for a procession to St. Paul's, till Vertue ascertained the history of it. The original is in the possession of lord Digby.

Queen ELIZABETH sitting in full parliament. Frontispiece to Sir Simonds D'Ewes's "Journals of the Parliaments of this Reign;" fol. 1682.

John Fenn, Esq of East Dereham, in Norfolk, has a most curious engraved roll of the procession of the knights of the garter, in the reign of Elizabeth; it is sixteen feet three inches in length, and about a foot in breadth. It contains fifty-nine portraits, betwixt four and five inches in height. At the end is a MS.

* In the "Archæologia of the Society of Antiquaries," vol. ii. p. 169, &c. is a copy of a proclamation in the hand-writing of Secretary Cecil, dated 1563, which prohibits "all manner of persons to draw, paynt, grave, or pourtrayit her majesty's personage or visage for a time, until by some perfect patron and example, the same may be by others followed, &c. and for that hir majestie perceiveth that a grete number of hir loving subjects are much greved and take grete offence with the errors and deformities allredy committed by sondry persons in this behalf, she straightly chargeth all hir officers and ministers to see to the due observation hereof, and as soon as may be to reform the errors already committed, &c."

dedication of it to the queen, signed Thomas Daws, and dated 1576. The names of the persons represented are also in MS. It is probably a proof-print engraved by Theodore de Brie.

There is a curious head of queen Elizabeth, when old and haggard, in the "Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors," done with great exactness from a coin, the die of which was broken.

The following summary of her history is under several of the abovementioned portraits.

"Having reformed religion; established peace; reduced coin to its just value*;
 "delivered Scotland from the French; revenged domestic rebellion; saved France from headlong ruin by civil war; supported Belgia; overthrown the Spanish invincible navy; expelled the Spaniards out of Ireland; received the Irish into mercy; enriched England by the most prudent government, forty-five years; Elizabeth, a virtuous and triumphant queen, in the seventieth year of her age, in a most happy and peaceable manner †, departed this life; leaving here her mortal parts, until by the last trump she shall rise immortal."

Elizabeth, who was raised from a prison to the throne, filled it with a sufficiency that does great honour to her sex; and with a dignity essential and peculiar to her character. Though her passions were warm, her judgment was temperate and cool: hence it was, that she was never led or over-ruled by her ministers or favourites, though men of great abilities and address. She practised all the arts of dissimulation for the salutary purposes of government. She so happily tempered affability and haughtiness, benevolence and severity, that she was much more loved than feared by the people; and was at the same time, the delight of her own subjects, and the terror of Europe. She was parsimonious, and even avaricious: but these qualities were in her rather virtues than vices; as they were the result of a rigid œconomy, that centered in the public. Her treatment of the queen of Scots, the most censurable part of her conduct, had in it more of policy than justice, and more of spleen than policy. This wise princess, who had never been the slave of her passions, at the time of life when they are found to be most powerful, fell a victim to their violence, at an age when they are commonly extinguished.

Several ingenious persons have been led into the same mistake; in which they were possibly confirmed by his medal, on the reverse of which is a broken lance. The marquis of Winchester, who was so much of the courtier as to accommodate himself to princes, as well as subjects of very different characters, was from his natural and acquired abilities, perfectly qualified to act with propriety in one of the highest offices of the state. Having been controller, and afterwards treasurer of the household, in the reign of Henry VIII. in which he was honoured with the Garter, he, in the fourth year of Edward VI. was made lord high-treasurer of England, in which office he continued during the next reign, and part of that of Elizabeth, to the time of his death, which was on the 10th of March, 1571-2. Camden tells us, that he lived to see 103 persons descended from him*. Being asked by what means he maintained himself in his high station during so many changes in the administration, his answer was "By being a willow, and not an oak," He built the magnificent structure, more like a palace than a villa, called Basing-house, which was taken and burnt by Cromwell in the civil war.

Lord Burleigh has been deservedly placed at the head of our English statesmen; not only for his great abilities, and indefatigable application, but also for his inviolable attachment to the interests of his mistress. There needs no stronger proof, perhaps no stronger can be given, of his great capacity for business, than the following passage from his life.

“ Besides all business in council, or other “ weighty causes, and such as were answered by “ word of mouth, there was not a day in term
“ wherein he received not three-score, fourscore,
“ or a hundred petitions, which he commonly “ read at night, and gave every man an answer
“ the next morning, as he went to the hall:

* “ I hope, (says Mr. Walpole) that the flattery to the favourites was the incense of the engraver.” I am persuaded that it was. But offensive as the portraits are, the large G, at the head of the first chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews in the same edition of the Bible, is far more offensive. It represents a naked Leda, with a Swan, as shocking in point of indecency as can be imagined, and still more so in point of impropriety, as it makes a part of so awful a word. It is highly probable, that this letter was cut for one of Ovid's books, and that it was thus grossly misapplied by the ignorant printer.

“whence the excellence of his memory was greatly admired; for when any of these petitioners told him their names, or what countrymen they were; he presently entered into the merit of his request, and having discussed it, gave him his answer.” He had a principal share in the administration forty years. Ob. 4 Aug. 1598*.

The print is old and neatly engraved. If there were any name of an engraver, it is defaced. It measures thirteen inches and three quarters wide, by nine inches and a half high, and is in the possession of John Fenn, Esq. of East Dereham, in Norfolk, who drew and sent me a sketch of it. This curious print came from a farm-house belonging to the Norfolk family; and the tradition is, that a proof was formerly given to every tenant of the duke; but how long since, or by whom, is uncertain.*

* “Lord Burleigh and the other great ministers of Elizabeth were absolutely of her own choice; and their characters and conduct were such, that nothing can be more just than what Mr. Waller observed of her to James II. who in diminution of her personal merit, allowed her to have an able council. To which he replied, with his usual vivacity, And when did your majesty ever know a foolish prince to chuse a wife one?” “Historical View of the Negotiations between England, France, and Brussels,” p. 216.

The

The great virtue and merit of this nobleman gained him the favour of the queen, and the universal love and esteem of the people, till he unhappily engaged himself in the desperate cause of Mary queen of Scots, whom he endeavoured to espouse, and restore to her throne. He seems to have been strongly actuated by two powerful passions, love and ambition, which soon precipitated him on his fate. He fell a sacrifice to the jealousy of Elizabeth, as his father the earl of Surrey did to that of Henry VIII. Beheaded the 2d of June, 1572.

The valiant and accomplished earl of Effex, who was the object of the queen's *, as well as the people's affection, was very ill-qualified for a court; as he was as honest and open in his enmity, as he was sincere in his friendship. He was above the little arts of dissimulation, and seemed to think it a prostitution of his dignity to put up an affront even from the queen herself. His adversaries, who were cool and deliberate in their malice, knew how to avail themselves of the warmth and openness of his temper, and secretly drove him to those fatal extremities, to which the violence of his nature seemed to have hurried him. Leicester's engaging person and address recommended him to the favour of queen Elizabeth*. These exterior qualifications, without the aid of any kind of virtue, or superiority of abilities, gained him such an ascendant over her, that every instance of his misconduct was overlooked; and he had the art to make his faults the means of rising higher in her favour. Could the secret history of great men be traced, it would appear that merit is rarely the first step to advancement. It would much oftener be found to be owing to superficial qualifications, and even vices. The abilities of the generality of mankind unfold themselves by degrees, and the office forms the man. Sir Christopher Hatton owed his preferment to his dancing. Queen Elizabeth, with all her sagacity, could not see the future lord chancellor in the fine dancer.

MATTHEW STUART, earl of Lenox, regent of Scotland. His portrait is with lord Darnly's cenotaph. See Class I.

The earl of Lenox, father of lord Darnly, was chosen regent in 1570. His abilities were by no means equal to the government of a headstrong and factious people during a minority. He was murdered by queen Mary's faction in 1571, according to Dr. Robertson; according to others, in 1572.

Great OFFICERS of IRELAND.

HENRICUS SYDNEIUS, Eques Aularatus. Ob. 1586. In the "Heroologia;" 8vo.

Sir Henry Sidney was the son of Sir William Sidney, a gentleman who distinguished himself as an officer by sea and land, in the reign of Henry VIII. to whom he was chamberlain and steward. His mother was Mary Dudley, eldest daughter of John, earl of Warwick. The beauty of his person, the brightness of his parts, and the politeness of his manners were conspicuous at an early period, and highly recommended him to Edward VI. with whom he was educated. Whether we consider him as a gentleman, a public minister or a viceroy, his character is shining, and, in some instances, great. His administration in Ireland, of which he was three times a lord justice, and four times deputy, shews how worthy he was of his vicerealty, and how consummate a master of the science of government. Though he was of a gentle nature, and of great public spirit, he knew that firmness, ness, and sometimes severity, were necessary to rule a fierce and uncivilized people, who were far from being totally subdued. His strictness in levying the cess imposed upon the Irish rendered him very unpopular, and was the occasion of his being recalled from his government. He hath modestly displayed his own character, with greater advantage than any other hand can draw it, in his letters, published with many other letters of his illustrious family. It is perhaps needless to inform the reader, that this great man, who deserves to be much better known, was father of Sir Philip Sidney.

The head is prefixed to an anonymous "History of his government in Ireland," 1626; 4<sup>to</sup>.

Sir John Perrot, was son of Sir Thomas Perrot, Gent. of the bed-chamber to Henry VIII. and Mary, daughter to James Berkeley, esq. a lady of the court; who, as Sir Robert Naunton tells us, "was of the king's familiarity;" and he adds, that "if his picture, qualities, gesture, and voice, be compared with that king's, they will plead strongly that he was a surreptitious child of the blood royal."

Henry, upon hearing of his valour in a rencounter at the Stews in Southwark, sent for him, and promised him preferment. He was of a size and stature far beyond ordinary men, seems never to have known what fear was, had a terrible aspect when provoked, and distinguished himself in all martial exercises more than any of his contemporaries. He was employed both by sea and land against Ireland in this reign; but in subduing that kingdom, gave too great a loose to the natural ferocity of his temper; for which, and for some unguarded expressions which he let fall against the queen*, he was attainted, and died in the Tower in a few months after his trial, in Sept. 1592. Dr. Swift says, in the preface to his "Polite Conversation," that he was the first that swore by G—s W—s.

ROBERT DEVEREUX, earl of Effex, was appointed lord deputy of Ireland, and commander of the forces in that kingdom, 1598-9.

His having this command, was entirely correspondent to the wishes of his vigilant and artful enemies who soon contrived to put him upon the forlorn hope. See the first division of this class.

Walter Devereux, earl of Effex, and earl-marshal of Ireland, was father of Elizabeth's favourite. He distinguished himself by suppressing a rebellion in the North, which was raised and supported by the earls of Cumberland and Westmoreland. He was afterwards sent to chastise the Irish rebels, but was unsuccessful in this expedition, as he was crossed in his designs by the earl of Leicester, and the lord-deputy Fitzwilliams. He died of a dysentery at Dublin, the 22d of September, 1576, not without a violent suspicion of poison, given him by the procurement of the earl of Leicester,

* The queen having sharply reprimanded him, afterwards sent him a soothing letter; which occasioned his saying, "Now she is ready to bepifs herself for fear of the Spaniard, I am again one of her white-boys."

He was long shut up in this place by a numerous army; but held it, with invincible firmness, during the complicated miseries of war, famine and pestilence, till he received an express command from Elizabeth to surrender it. In defence of this fortress, he received a wound in his leg, of which he long languished. At length he submitted to an amputation, which put an end to his life, the 20th of February, 1589, about the sixtieth year of his age. When Mary returned to her native country, he conceived the strongest passion for her; a passion in which ambition seems to have had little or no part; but being treated with coldness and neglect, he abandoned himself to solitude, and indulged his melancholy, which brought on an almost total deprivation of his reason, and cut short the expectations of his friends and admirers. Ob. 1609.

Matthew Parker, the second protestant archbishop of Canterbury, was a strict disciplinarian, and exacted an entire conformity to the national religion. He made a large collection of manuscripts and printed books, many of which belonged to abbies, colleges, and cathedral churches, before the Reformation. They relate chiefly to the "History of England," and were given by him to the library of Corpus Christi College, in Cambridge. He loved and patronized the arts; and employed a painter and two engravers in his palace at Lambeth. Besides the above mentioned book, he published the "Bishops Bible *," and several of the best of the old English historians; namely, Matthew Edmund Grindal †, a very learned and pious reformer of our church, was in the reign of Mary, one of the exiles for religion in Germany, where he diligently collected materials for a Martyrology, and greatly assisted John Fox in compiling his laborious work. Upon the accession of Elizabeth he returned to England, and was appointed one of the public disputants against popery. He had not sat long in the chair of Canterbury, before he was suspended for not suppressing the public theological exercises called prophecyings, which his conscience told him should have been encouraged and supported. It is recorded of him that he first brought the tamarisc into England. Ob. 6. July, 1583, Æt. 63.

Among other things, "it prays, "that all cathedral churches may be put down; where the service of God is grievously abused by piping with organs, singing, ringing, and trowling of Psalms from one side of the choir to another; with the squeaking of chanting choristers, disguised (as all the rest) in white surplices; some in corner caps and filthy copes, imitating the fashion and manner of antichrist the Pope †, that man of sin, and child of perdition, with his other rabble of miscreants and shavelings. Laurence Humphrey, one of the greatest divines, and most general scholars of this age, was a voluntary exile for religion, in the reign of Mary. Upon the accession of Elizabeth, he returned to England, and was, in 1560, constituted the queen's professor of divinity, and the next year elected president of Magdalen College in Oxford. He was afterwards successively dean of Gloucester and Winchester, which was the highest preferment he held in the church. He would probably have been raised much higher, had he been less zealous for the principles of the non-conformists, which he imbibed at Geneva. When Elizabeth visited the university, he and bishop Jewel entertained her with a public theological disputation. His elegant Latin oration spoken before that princess at Woodstock, is in print*. John Rainolds, president of Corpus Christi College in Oxford, was generally reputed the greatest scholar of his age and country. He not only digested, but also remembered what he read, and hardly knew what it was to forget. He was in polemics esteemed a match for Bellarmine, the Goliath of the church of Rome, who bid defiance to armies of divines; and scarce yielded to any of his contemporaries in any other branch of science. Hakewill styles him a living library, or third university. He was made dean of Lincoln in 1593; but soon exchanged his deanery for the presidentship of Corpus Christi College. In 1589, the year in which he died, he published the text of the Rhemish and English Testaments together, in folio, in order to expose the false translations and errors of the former. He was, for a considerable time, a warm advocate for the principles of the non-conformists; as were also Rainolds, Humphrey, and other celebrated divines at this period, who, in process of time, got the better of their prejudices, and made a near approach to the doctrine and discipline of the established church.

Richard Hooker was some time master of the Temple, and afterwards rector of Bishop’s Bourne in Kent. His “ Ecclesiastical Polity,” which is a defence of our church-government against the cavils of the puritans, is written with a classic simplicity, and esteemed one of the completest works, both for style and argument, of the age in which he lived, or any other. Queen Elizabeth used to call him the judicious Hooker, by which epithet he is still distinguished. Isaac Walton, who published a well written account of the life of this excellent but humble man, has proved the dates of his death in Camden, and on his monument, to be both wrong. Ob. 2 Nov. 1600. Jewel, Rainolds, and Hooker, were of C. C. C. in Oxford; which had the glory of supplying the church with three contemporary divines, who were not to be equalled in any society in the world.

Thomas Brightman, rector of Hawnes in Bedfordshire, was educated at Queen's College, in Cambridge. He wrote commentaries in Latin on the "Canticles," and the "Apocalypse," the latter of which, for a long time, made a great noise in the world. He, in that book, makes archbishop Cranmer the angel having power over the fire, and the lord-treasurer Cecil the angel of the waters, justifying the pouring out the third vial. The church of England is the lukewarm church of Laodicea; and "the angel that God loved," is the antiepiscopal church of Geneva, and that of Scotland: and the power of prelacy is Antichrist. In the reign of Charles I. when the bishops were expelled the house of peers, and several of them imprisoned, Brightman was cried up for an inspired writer, and an abridgment of his book, intitled "The Revelation of the Revelations," was printed*. He is said to have prayed for sudden death, and to have died travelling in a coach, with a book in his hand, 1607.

He was expelled the university for puritanism, by Dr. Whitgift, the vice-chancellor, with whom he maintained a long controversy about church-discipline. This controversy is in print. He was at the head of those rigid Calvinists who openly opposed the Liturgy, and episcopal jurisdiction, and were advocates for the plan of religion established at Geneva. Ob. 1603.

The following note is taken from the late professor Ward's papers. "Dr. Rich. The book was republished when the nation was under great apprehensions of popery, 1684. This edition is printed in a Roman letter, with copper cuts, in three vols. folio.

The great work of the "Acts and Monuments of the Church," by John Fox, may be regarded as a vast Gothic building: in which some things are superfluous, some irregular, and others manifestly wrong: but which, altogether, infuse a kind of religious reverence; and we stand amazed at the labour, if not at the skill, of the architect. This book was, by order of queen Elizabeth, placed in the common halls of archbishops, bishops, deans, archdeacons, and heads of colleges; and was long looked upon with a veneration next to the Scriptures themselves. The same has been said of Fox, which was afterwards said of Burnet; that several persons furnished him with accounts of pretended facts, with a view of ruining the credit of his whole performance. But the author does not stand in need of this apology; as it was impossible, in human nature, to avoid many errors in so voluminous a work, a great part of which consists of anecdotes. Ob. 18 Ap. 1587, Æt. 70.

John Knox was a rigid Calvinist, and the most violent of the reformers. His intrepid zeal and popular eloquence, qualified him for the great work of Reformation in Scotland, which perhaps no man of that age was equal to but himself. He affected the dignity of the apostolic character, but departed widely from the meekness of it. He even dared to call the queen of Scots Jezebel to her face, and to denounce vengeance against her from the pulpit. The address sent by the Scottish rebels to the established church, was supposed to be penned by him. This title, which is characteristic of the man, was affixed to it: "To the generation of Antichrist, the pestilent prelates, and their shavelings, in Scotland, the congregation of Christ Jesus within the same sayeth, &c." He was author of several hot pieces of controversy, and other theological works. He was also author of a "History of the Reformation of the church of Scotland, from 1422 to 1567," in folio. Ob. 24 Nov. 1572.

ALANUS, Cardinalis; Esme de Boulonois f. 4to. In the "Academie des Sciences," tom. ii. p. 37.

William Alan, cardinal priest of the church Cr. 28 July, of Rome, and a celebrated writer in its defence, 1587.

* Vertue had a considerable collection of curious heads from medals, of which he frequently took drawings and casts.

was educated at Oriel College in Oxford; and in 1556, chosen principal of St. Mary Hall. Upon the accession of Elizabeth, he retired to Louvain, where he published his book on the subject of "Purgatory, and prayers for the Dead;" in which rhetoric, of which he was a great master, held the place of argument. This was the ground-work of his reputation. He afterwards returned to England, where he lurked several years in disguise, and printed an apology for his religion, which he industriously dispersed. He had the chief hand in establishing the English seminaries at Douay and Rheims, and several others in Spain and Italy. He was justly regarded as a most dangerous enemy to the civil, as well as religious liberties of his country; as he persuaded Philip II. to undertake the conquest of England, and endeavoured by a book, which he published about the same time, to persuade the people to take up arms against the queen. Ob. 6 Oct. 1594. Æt. 63.

THOMAS STAPLETONUS, Æc. in a doctor of divinity's habit, 4to. neat.

Thoms Stapleton, a native of Yorkshire, was educated at New College, in Oxford. In the reign of Mary he was promoted to a canonry of Chichester. In that of Elizabeth, he settled at Louvain, where he greatly distinguished himself by the controversial writings which he published against Jewel, Whitaker and other eminent divines of the established church. He afterwards went to Douay, where he took the degree of doctor in divinity, of which faculty he

he was elected professor; but being offered the chair at Louvain, he returned thither, and was, about the same time, advanced to the deanry of Hilverbeck, in Brabant. It is said, that Clement VIII. intended to bestow upon him a cardinal's hat: and that this honour was prevented by his death, which was on the 12th of October, 1598. Clement was so great an admirer of his writings, that he ordered them to be read publickly at his table. Cardinal Perron, who was an eminent author himself*, esteemed him, both for learning and acuteness, the first polemical divine of his age. There is a catalogue of his works, which are in four volumes folio, in Dod's "Church History," ii. 86. His "Tres Thomæ," containing the lives of St. Thomas the Apostle, St. Thomas Becket, and Sir Thomas More, is one of the most curious of his books.

RICHARD WHYTE; in Latin Vitus;

Richard White, some time fellow of New College in Oxford, was, in the reign of Elizabeth, constituted Regius Professor of the civil and canon law at Douay, and created count palatine by the emperor. Having buried two wives, he, by the dispensation of pope Clement VIII. took priest's orders, and was presented to a canonry in St. Peter's Church at Douay. His principal work was, "Historiarum Britannicæ Insulæ, &c. Libri novem, Duac. 1602;" 8vo. to which is prefixed his head. Among other things, he wrote an explanation of the famous enigmatical epitaph at Bologna, which has been so variously interpreted. It is probable that the author of it, who might have been better employed, made it on purpose to puzzle the idly inquisitive amongst the learned.

The following Priests and Jesuits, who have been recorded in the black catalogue of criminals by protestants, and in the bright list of saints and martyrs by papists, were more formidable to the queen and her people than is commonly imagined. As she stood excommunicated by a bull of Pius V. and was the main pillar of the reformed religion, she was compelled by the great law of necessity, though not without grief and reluctance *, to let loose the laws against seminary priests and Jesuits, her known enemies, as her personal safety, and that of her kingdom, depend upon it. This, Father Parsons himself was so candid as to own, in a private letter to one of his friends †. These unhappy missionaries, enterprising and dangerous as they were, are, however, entitled to our pity, as they acted in their proper character, and in conformity with the genius of their religion.

‡ Parsons and Campian were the first missionaries that the Jesuits sent into England.

This, and several others that follow, were taken from a sheet print, entitled, "Effigies & Nomina quorundam e Societate Jesu, qui pro Fide vel Pietate sunt interfecti, ab anno 1549 ad annum 1607," done at Rome. The sheet contains twenty-four heads.

Edmund Campian was educated at Christ's Hospital, in London, whence he removed to St. John's College, in Oxford. Here he distinguished himself as an orator and a disputant, in both which capacities he entertained queen Elizabeth at a public act, when she visited that university. He soon after became a convert to the church of Rome, and retired to the college at Douay, where he took his bachelor of divinity's degrees. In 1573, he travelled to Rome, where he became a Jesuit, and was soon after sent by his superiors as a missionary into Germany, where he composed his Latin tragedy, called "Nectar and Ambrosia," which was acted with great applause in the presence of the emperor. The last scene of his life was in England, where he was regarded as a dangerous adversary of the established church. He was executed at Tyburn, the first of December, 1581. His writings shew him to have been a man of various and polite learning. His "Decem Rationes," written against the Protestant religion, have been solidly answered by several of our best divines. The original manuscript of his "History of Ireland" is in the British Museum. See Dod, ii. p. 137, &c.

ALEXANDER BRIANT, Soc. Jesu, Londini, pro Catholica Fide, suspensus et secus, 1 Decemb. 1581; small.

Alexander Briant, who was born in Somersetshire, studied at Oxford, and afterwards at Douay. He was sent into England, in character of a missionary, in the reign of Elizabeth. In 1581, he was imprisoned, and, as Dod tells us*, was cruelly treated while he was in the Tower, by thrusting needles under the nails of his fingers, to force him to a discovery of what was acting abroad against the queen and government †. He was a young man of singular beauty, and behaved at the place of execution with decent intrepidity. Execut. Dec. 1, 1581.

Thomas Cottam, who was born in Lancashire, studied some time at Brazen-Nose College, in Oxford, and afterwards at Rheims, where he was ordained priest. In 1580, he was sent on a mission into England, but was apprehended soon after his landing. Dr. Ely, a professor of the civil and canon law at Douay, happened to be at Dover when he was taken, and with great address contrived and effected his escape; but as this benevolent act was like to be attended with the ruin of him and his family, Cottam very generously surrendered himself to save his benefactor. He was several times put to the torture in prison, but could not be prevailed with to make any confession, or renounce his religion. He and Briant are said to have been admitted into the Society of Jesus a little before their death. He was exe-

Edmund Jennings was admitted into the English college, at Rheims, under doctor, afterwards cardinal, Allen, and when he was twenty years of age, ordained priest. He was soon after sent into England, where he was apprehended in the act of celebrating mass. He was executed, by hanging and quartering, in Gray's-Inn-Fields, the 10th of December, 1591.

In the rare book above mentioned, are several historical prints, representing the principal circumstances of his life and death. This work was published, at a considerable expence, by the Papists, in order to perpetuate the remembrance of two "miracles," which are there said to have happened at his death. The first is, that, after his heart was taken out, he said, "Sancte Gregori, ora pro me," which the hangman hearing, swore, "God's wounds! see his heart is in my hand; yet Gregory is in his mouth." The other is, that an holy virgin being desirous of procuring some relick of him, contrived to approach the basket into which his quarters were thrown, and touched his right hand, which she esteemed most holy, from its having been employed in acts of consecration and elevating the host, and immediately his thumb came off without force or discovery, and she carried it home, and preserved it with the greatest care.

Roger Filcock, by Mr. Stow erroneously called Thomas, received his education at Seville, in Spain, where he was ordained priest, and soon after sent hither as a missionary. Dod informs us, that he and Mark Backworth, a gentleman who acted in the same character, were executed at Tyburn, the 27th of February, 1601, together with Mrs. Anne Line, who suffered death for harbouring and assisting missionaries*.

Francis Page, having for some time applied himself to the study of the law, went abroad, was ordained priest, and sent back upon a mission. He was, according to Dod's account of him, seized and condemned to die for receiving holy orders, and was executed at Tyburn, in 1601. The same author adds, that Mrs. Lyne, a widow gentlewoman, with whom he resided, was prosecuted and suffered death for entertaining him †. This appears to be the person mentioned above in the article of Filcock.

Sir THOMAS SMITH, holding a book; a wooden print; motto, Ingenium nulla manus. In "Gabrielis Harveii, Valdinatis, Smithus, vel Musarum Lachrymæ pro Obitu, &c. 1578," 4to.

Sir Thomas Smith was several times sent ambassador into France in this reign; and on the twenty-fourth of June, 1572, he was appointed secretary of state. In 1575, he procured an act of parliament that a third part of the rent upon college-leases should be always reserved in corn, at the low price at which it then sold. He clearly foresaw that the collegiate bodies would reap great advantage from this act, as there was the highest probability that the price of grain would be much advanced.

Sir Francis Walsingham, who was employed by the queen in the most important embassies, was advanced to the post of secretary of state, in Jan. 1572-3 This great man's talent for business, his learning, eloquence, insinuating address, universal intelligence, and profound secrecy, are mentioned in all the histories of this reign. He knew how to be grave or facetious, could laugh with Henry IV. of France, and quote Greek and Latin authors with James VI. of Scotland. He was so far from raising a fortune, that he spent his patrimony in the service of the public, and was buried in the night, at the expence of his friends, who were apprehensive that his corpse might be arrested for debt. Ob. 6 Ap. 1590.

EDMOND ANDERSON, Knt. lord chief justice of the common pleas, Æt. 76. W. Faithorne sc. Frontispiece to his “ Reports,” in French, 1664, 1665; fol.

Sir Edmund Anderson sat in judgment upon Mary queen of Scots, in October, 1586; and the next year presided at the trial of secretary Davison, in the Star-chamber, for signing the warrant for the execution of that princess. His decision in that nice point was, “ That he had done justum, non juste; he had done what was right in an unlawful manner, otherwise he thought him no bad man *.” Ob. 1605.

This judge was very eminent in his profession; but none of his writings were ever printed. His head is in Dugdale’s “ Origines Juridicales,” 1666, and in 1671; fol.

* This was excellent logic for finding an innocent man guilty. It was drawn from the same mood and figure with the queen’s order, and no-order, for Davison’s signing the warrant. The lord chief-justice, who was otherwise no bad man himself, was obliged to find him guilty, upon pain of being deprived of his office. Sir Philip Sidney was governor of Flushing, and general of the horse under his uncle the earl of Leicester. His valour, which was esteemed his most shining quality, was not exceeded by any of the heroes of his age: but even this was equalled by his humanity. After he had received his death's wound at the battle of Zutphen, and was overcome with thirst from excessive bleeding, he called for drink, which was presently brought him. At the same time, a poor soldier was carried along desperately wounded, who fixed his eager eyes upon the bottle, just as he was lifting it to his mouth; upon which he instantly delivered it to him, with these words: "Thy necessity is yet greater than mine*."

Charles Howard, earl of Nottingham, was, for his great abilities in naval affairs, advanced, in 1588, to the office of lord high admiral. In this memorable year he, and the gallant officers under him, did much in sinking and destroying the Spanish Armada*; but the winds did more. Upon this great event, the queen ordered a medal to be struck, with this inscription, "Afflavit Deus, et dissipantur;" "He blew with his wind, and they are scattered †." Sir Francis Drake, before he had the royal sanction for his depredations, was a famous free-booter against the Spaniards. The queen made no scruple of employing so bold and enterprizing a man against a people who were themselves the greatest free-booters and plunderers amongst mankind. He was the first Englishman that encompassed the globe. Magellan, whose ships passed the South Seas some time before, died in his passage. In 1587, he burnt one hundred vessels at Cadiz, and suspended the threatened invasion for a year; and, about the same time, took a rich East India carrack near the Terceras, by which the English gained so great insight into trade in that part of the world, that it occasioned the establishment of the East India Company. In 1588 he was appointed vice-admiral under lord Effingham, and acquitted himself in that important command with his usual valour and conduct.

Sir Walter Raleigh served in the wars in the Low Countries, and in Ireland; and was afterwards employed in discoveries in the West Indies, and in the improvement of navigation, to which his genius was strongly inclined. In 1584 he discovered Virginia, to which he made no less than five voyages. He was one of the most distinguished officers on board the fleet which engaged the armada. He was constantly employed in literary pursuits at sea and land. His learning was continually improved into habits of life, and helped greatly to advance his knowledge of men and things; and he became a better soldier, a better sea-officer, an abler statesman, and a more accomplished courtier, in proportion as he was a better scholar. He was constituted vice-admiral, 1600. See the next reign, Class IX.

There is, or was, an ancient portrait of him in the stair-case leading to the Picture Gallery at Oxford.

Sir Martin Frobiser was an officer of distinction on board the fleet which engaged the armada, and had a great share in the danger and honour on that glorious occasion. In 1592, he went a privateering voyage with Sir Walter Raleigh, and took a Spanish carrack valued at 200,000*l.* He first attempted to discover a north-west passage to China, and with that view made several voyages; in one of which he brought away a man, woman, and child, from the Straits which bear his name. He died in 1594 of a wound, which he received in attempting to take a fort near Brest.

RICHARDUS GRENVILLUS, Mil. Aur. In the "Heroologia;" 8vo.

Sir Richard Greenville was vice-admiral under lord Thomas Howard, son to the duke of Norfolk, who was sent with a squadron of seven ships to America, to intercept the Spanish galleons laden with treasure from the West Indies. Sir Richard, who happened to be separated from the rest of the squadron, unfortunately fell in with the enemies fleet of fifty-two sail, which he engaged and repulsed fifteen times. He continued fighting till he was covered with blood and wounds, and nothing remained of his ship but a battered hulk. He died on board the Spanish fleet three days after, expressing the highest satisfaction in the article of death, at his having acted as a true soldier ought to have done *. Ob. 1591. He was grandfather of the famous Sir Bevil Greenvile.

He took possession of Newfoundland in the name of queen Elizabeth; but was unsuccessful in his attempt to settle a colony on the continent of America. He, as well as Sir Walter Raleigh, pursued his studies at sea and land, and was seen in the dreadful tempest which swallowed up his ship, sitting unmoved in the stern of the vessel, with a book in his hand; and was often heard to say, "Courage my lads! we are as near heaven at sea, as at land." He always wore on his breast a golden anchor suspended to a pearl, which was given him by the queen. There was a portrait of him in the possession of his descendants in Devonshire, with this honourable badge. Thomas Cavendish was a gentleman adventurer, who, soon after the commencement of hostilities between England and Spain, undertook to annoy the Spaniards in the West Indies; and carried fire and sword into their remotest territories. He burnt and destroyed nineteen of their ships, and took the admiral of the South Seas, valued at 48,800 l. In this expedition he encompassed the globe, and returned in great triumph to England. His soldiers and sailors were clothed in silk, his sails were damask, and his top-mast covered with cloth of gold. Among them are seven clothworkers, six drapers, one fishmonger, two goldsmiths, six grocers, five haberdashers ‡, four ironmongers, five mercers, two salters, two skinners, two merchant taylors, and one vintner.*

The personal history of these city magistrates is almost as uniform as their dress; and the simplicity and plainness of their manners were as different from those of some who have since filled the chair, as the delicate engraving and the bold and flaming mezzotinto are from the rude effigy cut in wood. It would be amusing to trace the progress of a lord mayor, from the loom or the fishmonger's stall, to the chair of the magistrate; to be informed with what difficulty he got the first hundred pounds, with how much less he made it a thousand, and with what ease he rounded his plumb. Such are, in the eye of reason, respectable characters; and the more so, as they rose with credit from humbler stations.

Sir Wolstan Dixie, who was a friend to his country and to mankind, deserves to be remembered for his exemplary character as a magistrate, and his extensive charities; for a detail of which the reader is referred to "Stow's Survey of London." The present Sir Wolstan Dixie has more reason to boast of having such an ancestor in his family, than of the tradition that the founder of it was allied to king Egbert. See the "English Baronets," ii. p. 89.

He read the Greek, Roman, and Arabian authors, in his own faculty, and wrote several medical treatises himself. The collection of his works is intitled, “Bulleyn’s Bulwarke of Defence against all Sicknes, Sorenes, and Woundes, that do daily assaulte Mankind; which Bulwarke is kept with Hillarius the Gardener, Health the Physician, with their Chyrurgian to help the wounded Soldiours, &c.” 1562; fol. Mark Ridley was physician to the company of English merchants residing in Russia, and afterwards to the Russian emperor. After his return to England he was chosen one of the eight principals or elects of the College of Physicians. He was author of a “ Treatise of “ Magnetical Bodies,” in which he intimates, that longitudes might be rectified by the nautic needle *. Thomas Gale is said, by bishop Tanner †, to have been the most celebrated surgeon of his time; and to have been educated under Richard Ferris, principal surgeon to queen Elizabeth. Yet the same author informs us, that he was in the army of Henry VIII. at Muttrel, (Montreuil), in 1544; and with King Philip at St. Quintin, in 1557. This seems to clash with chronology; but is, however, far from

tution of a Chirurgeon,” and also published a collection of his own pieces in folio, 1563; to all which his head hath been prefixed. The most curious of his works is an Herbal, con-in the year 1586.

in 1587. Mr. Wood informs us that the author, or rather collector of these receipts, who appears to have been no graduate in physic, was some time fellow of Magdalen college, in Oxford. Mr Boyle’s “ Medicinal Experiments, “ or

“ or a Collection of choice and safe Remedies,” for the use of families and country-people, is the most noted book of this kind. John Westley hath published a collection of receipts, called “ Primitive Physic,” among which are some very good ones, particularly Sir Stephen Fox’s remedy for weak eyes. This book, by the help of the title, hath had a good run *, particularly among the methodists, whose faith co-operating with nature, frequently made them whole, when Mr. Westley had the credit of the cure.

England. He stands distinguished from almost all other poets, in that faculty by which a poet is distinguished from other writers, namely, invention; and excelled all his contemporaries in harmonious versification. The stanza of Spenser, and the old words which constantly occur in his works, contribute to give this great poet an air of peculiarity: hence it is that almost all the imitations of him resemble the original*. It is to be regretted that such vigour of imagination and harmony of numbers should have been lavished upon an endless and uninteresting allegory, abounding with all the whimsies of knight errantry. It ought at the same time to be remembered, that it was much more interesting in the days of Elizabeth than it is in the present age. According to lord Lyttelton, he has, in his poem, represented that great queen “as the patroness of the most sublime chivalry, and as sending forth the moral virtues, illustrated under the characters of different knights, &c. In this light, the “Fairy Queen” is as much a state poem as the “Æneis of Virgil †.” Parnassus proved a very barren soil to him. The queen was far from having a just sense of his merit; and lord Burleigh, who prevented her giving him a hundred pounds, seems to have thought the lowest clerk in his office a more deserving person. It was very hard that a genius who did honour to his country, should get less by writing, than a journey-

* Peculiarity of any kind is striking; and in proportion as it is so, is generally more imitable, either in poetry or painting. It is easier to imitate the style of a mannerist, than the simplicity of Raphael or Poussin.

* It has been said that there never was an original portrait of Shakespeare; but that Sir Thomas Clarges, after his death, caused a portrait to be drawn for him, from a person who nearly resembled him. Mr. Walpole informs me, that the only original picture of Shakespeare is that which belonged to Mr. Keck, from whom it passed to Mr. Nicoll, whose only daughter married the marquis of Caernarvon. This agrees with what is said in the "Critical Review," for December, 1770, in relation to the same portrait, which is there also said to have been "painted either by Richard Burbage, or John Taylor the Player, the latter of whom left it by will to Sir William Davenant. After his death, Betterton, the actor, bought it; and when he died, Mr. Keck of the Temple gave forty guineas for it to Mrs. Barry the Actress." Mr. Walpole adds, that Marshall's print is genuine too, and probably drawn from the life.

Though Shakespeare be a writer of a mixed character, he will ever be ranked in the first class of our English poets. His beauties are his own, and, in the strictest sense, original. The faults found in him are chiefly those of the age in which he lived, his transcribers, and his editors. He not only excelled in copying nature, but his imagination carried him beyond it. He had all the creative powers of fancy to form new characters*; and was more an original genius than any other writer. He, like other great poets, has had the felicity of having his faults admired, for the sake of his beauties. See the next reign.

JOHN DONNE, Æt. 18; Marshall sc. Frontispiece to his Poems, 1635; 12mo.

John Donne, styled by Mr. Dryden "the greatest wit, though not the greatest poet, of our nation," wrote on various subjects; but his greatest excellency was satire. He had a prodigious richness of fancy; but his thoughts were much debased by his versification. Drummond, the famous Scottish poet, affirmed to Ben Johnson, that he wrote his best pieces before he was twenty five years of age:

" 'Twas then plain Donne in honest vengeance

 " His wit harmonious, but his rhyme was
 " prose."

PHILIPPUS SIDNEYUS: Van Hove sc.

This accomplished gentleman seems to have been the delight and admiration of the age of Elizabeth, rather for the variety, than the greatness of his genius. He that was the ornament of the university, was also the ornament of the court; and appeared with equal advantage in a field of battle, or at a tournament; in a private conversation among his friends, or in a public character as an ambassador. His talents were equally adapted to prose or verse, to original composition, or translation. His "Arcadia" was not only admired for its novelty, but continued to be read longer than such compositions usually are, and has passed through fourteen editions. The reader will find the language of the Arcadia incomparably better than the affected pedantic style of Lilly's "Euphues," which was much read and admired by the ladies at court in this reign. He died * the 16th of Oct. 1586.

There are two original pictures of him in the possession of Dr. Harington of Bath, who is lineally descended from him.

Sir John Harington had, in his time, a very considerable reputation as a poet and translator, and was also noted for his ready wit. He was author of four books of epigrams, which were printed after his decease. His "Translation of "Ariosto" was published in his life-time, with cuts*. His genius was thought to be better suited to epigram, than heroic poetry. He was god-son to queen Elizabeth.

GEORGE GASCOIGNE; in armour; ruff; large beard; on his right hand a musket and bandeleers; on his left, books, &c. underneath, "Tanquam Marti, quam Mercurio."

George Gascoigne, a gentleman of a good education, served with reputation in the wars in the Low Countries; and after his return to England, distinguished himself by his writings in prose and verse. He published several books of poems with fantastic titles, namely "Flowers," "Herbs," "Weeds," &c. Among which are several dramatic pieces. He was esteemed the best love-poet of his age. There is a pamphlet in the black letter, intitled, "A Remembrance of the well-employed Life and godly End of George Gascoigne, Esq. who deceased at Stamford, in Lincolnshire, Oct. 7. 1577," by George Whetstone, Gent. This contradicts the date of his death, which I took from the "Athenæ Oxonienses." See "Re-

George Buchanan, a very celebrated Scottish poet and historian, who in both those characters has happily emulated the simplicity and beauty of the ancients, was preceptor to James VI. The most applauded of his poetical works is his translation of the Psalms, particularly of the CIV *. His History of Scotland, in which

* This Psalm has been translated into Latin by nine Scottish poets. Eight of these translations were printed at Edinburgh, 1699, 12mo. together with the “Poetic Duel” of Dr. George Egghem with Buchanan. The former accused that great poet of bad Latin, and bad poetry, in his version of this Psalm, and made no scruple of preferring his own translation of it to Buchanan’s. The “Consilium Collegii Medicæ Parisiensis de Mania G. Egghemii, quam prodidit Scripro,” is well worth the reader’s perusal for its pleasantry: it is prefixed to the “Poetic Duel.” The ninth Latin translation of the CIV. Psalm, was by the famous Dr. Pitcairne. It was published in the name of Walter Dannifon. There is an admired version of this Psalm in English by Blacklock, a poet of the same nation, who was born blind. See his Poems published by Mr. Spence.

JACOBUS CRITONIUS, Salminicio sc. octavo size: In the "Museum Historicum" of Imperialis. Poorly executed, but most probably authentic. A print of him is now † engraving for the second part of Mr. Pennant's "Tour in Scotland." The drawing was taken from a picture in the possession of Lord Eliock, a Lord of the Session at Edinburgh. This is a copy, by a grandson of Sir John Medina, from the original, in the possession of Mr. Graham, of Airth.

There is a genuine picture of him in the possession of Mr. Alexander Morison, of Bagnie, in the county of Bamff, in Scotland. It is supposed that this portrait was sent from Italy, by himself, to Viscount Fendraught, the chief of the family of Crichton ‡.

This amazing genius seems to have surprised and astonished mankind, like a new northern star. He, together with an athletic strength and singular elegance of form, possessed the various powers of the human mind in their full force, and almost every acquired talent that could recommend the man, or adorn the gentleman. One would imagine that he was made of the art for which Raymond Lully is said to have been distinguished; that of talking readily upon subjects which he did not understand: but he disputed with adepts and learned doctors, and foiled literary champions at their own weapons. If all that is said of him by authors of character be true, he is much better intitled to the appellation of Phoenix than John Picus Mirandula; but the elevation and extension of the genius of this wonderful man appears to have been "more a flight than a growth." If he had lived longer, and written more *, it is probable that his works would not, like those of his countryman Buchanan, have continued unimpaired by time. Crichton shot up like the mountain pine; Buchanan rose slowly like the oak †. The one is rather an object of temporary admiration; the other retains its strength and beauty, after it hath stood the shock of ages. It is probable, that the great qualities of Crichton served to precipitate his fate. Vicencio de Gonzaga, prince of Mantua, his pupil, prompted by jealousy or envy, basely attacked, and brutally murdered him, in the street, in the time of Carnival, in the year 1583, and the ‡ twenty-second year of his age. If the reader should, in a collective view, consider what is said of him by Imperialis, in his "Museum;" by Mackenzie, in his "History of Scotch Writers;" by bishop Tanner, in his "Bibliotheca;" and by Dr. Hawkesworth, in "The Adventurer;" he will find full enough to exercise his faith, though mankind be naturally fond of the marvellous, and ever willing to stretch their faculties to the utmost to reconcile it with truth.

* Dr. Samuel Johnson informed me, that two copies of verses, one at least, of which is in the "Deliciae Poetarum Scotorum," are the only known pieces of Crichton. Bishop Tanner is, perhaps, mistaken, in attributing several books to him, which belong to another writer of the same name.

† "Crevit occulto velut arbor ævo."

The inscription on the print alludes to his being set at liberty at Thoulouse, after a tedious confinement, which was occasioned by a popular insurrection in that city.*

Mark Alexander Boyd *, who was comparable, if not equal, to the admirable Crichton †, was born in Galloway, on the thirteenth day of January 1562, and came into the world with teeth. He learned the rudiments of the Latin and Greek languages at Glasgou, under two grammarians; but was of so high and intractable a spirit, that they despaired of ever making him a scholar. Having quarrelled with his masters, he beat them both, burnt his books, and forswore learning. While he was yet a youth he followed the court, and did his utmost to push his interest there; but the fervour of his temper soon precipitated him into quarrels, from which he came off with honour and safety, though frequently at the hazard of his life. He, with the approbation of his friends, went to serve in the French army, and carried his little patrimony with him, which he soon dissipated at play. He was shortly after roused by that emulation which is natural to great minds,

* He was son of Robert Boyd, who was eldest son of Adam Boyd, of Pinkhill, brother to Lord Boyd. James Boyd, archbishop of Glasgou, was a younger son of Adam. Sir Robert Sibbald, who was descended from the same family with Mark Alexander Boyd, took his Life from a manuscript in his possession, and inserted it in his "Prodromus Historiæ Naturalis Scotiæ." Lib. III. part. ii. p. 2, 3, 4.

and applied himself to letters with unremit-ted ardour, till he became one of the most consummate scholars of the age. His parts were superior to his learning, as is abundantly testified by his writings in print and manuscript.
 The Greek and Latin were as familiar to him as his mother tongue. He could readily dictate to three scribes in as many different languages and subjects. He had an easy and happy vein of poetry, wrote elegies in the Ovidian manner, and his hymns were thought to be superior to those of any other Latin poet*. He wrote a great number of other poems in the same language, and translated Cæsar's Commentaries into Greek, in the style of Herodotus: this translation was never printed. His other manuscripts on philological, political, and historical subjects, in Latin and French, are enumerated by the author of his Life, who tells us that he was the best Scottish poet of his age; and that, as a writer in his native language, he was upon a level with Ronsard and Petrarch.
 He was tall, compact, and well-proportioned in his person; his countenance was beautiful, sprightly, and engaging; he had a noble air;
 and appeared to be the accomplished soldier among men of the sword, and as eminently the scholar among those of the gown. He spent the greatest part of his unsettled life in France, but died at Pinkhill, his father's seat, in April, 1601, about the thirty-eighth, or thirty-ninth year of his age.

* Olaus Borrichius, a very eminent and judicious critic. at p.
 150. of his "Dissertationes Academicæ de poetis," speaking of Boyd says, "In Marco Alexandro Bodio, Scoto redivivum spectamus Na-sonem; ea est in ejusdem Epistolis Heroicum, lux, candor, dexteritas."
 He speaks as highly of his Hymns in heroic verse.

This book, in which Mr. Camden is treated with very little ceremony, or even common decency, was of great ufe to him in the fifth edition, published in 1600. William Lambarde, a learned and industrious antiquary, was author of the "Archæionomia, five de priscis Anglorum Legibus," 1568; 4to. and of the "Perambulation of Kent," 1570. He carefully collected many of the old MSS. which were in the Cotton Library, and was the founder of an alms-house at Greenwich. John Stow, who was bred a taylor, quitted his occupation, to pursue his beloved study of the history and antiquities of England, to which he had an invincible propensity. He was not only indefatigable in searching for ancient authors and MSS. of all kinds relating to English history, but was also at the pains of transcribing many things with his own hand. As his studies and collections engrossed his whole attention, he, in a few years, found himself in embarrassed circumstances, and was under a necessity of returning to his trade; but was enabled by the generosity of archbishop Parker to resume his studies. Humphrey Lloyd, a celebrated antiquary, was sometime of Brazen Nose College in Oxford, where he seems to have studied physic for his amusement, as he never followed it as a profession. He had a taste for the arts, particularly music, and did the map of England for the "Theatrum Orbis" of Ortelius, his intimate friend, to whom he addressed his "Commentarioli Britannicæ Descriptionis Fragmentum," 1572; 12mo. and his epistle "De Mona Druidum Insula, Antiquitati suæ restituta." He also wrote "Chronicon Walliæ, a Rege Cadwalladero, usque ad An. Dom. 1294;" a MS. in the Cotton Library. He collected a great number of curious and useful books for lord Lumley his brother-in-law. These were purchased by James I. and were the foundation of the Royal Library. They are now a very valuable part of the British Museum. Ob. circ. 1570.

Sir Thomas Bodley merited much as a man of letters; but incomparably more, in the ample provision he has made for literature, in which he stands unrivalled. In 1599, he opened his library, a mausoleum which will perpetuate his memory as long as books themselves endure. He drew up the statutes himself for the regulation of this his library, and wrote memoirs of his own life. Hearne, in his "Camdeni Elizabetha," has published "An Account of an agreement between Q. John Dee was a man of extensive learning, particularly in the mathematics, in which he had few equals; but he was vain, credulous, and enthusiastic. He was deep in astrology, and strongly tinged with the superstition of the Rosicrucians; whose dreams he listened to with eagerness, and became as great a dreamer himself as any of that fraternity. He appears to have been, by turns, a dupe and a cheat, but acquired prodigious reputation, and was courted by the greatest princes in Europe, who thought that in possessing him, they should literally possess a treasure: he was offered large pensions by the emperors Charles V. Ferdinand; Maximilian, Rodolph, and the czar of Muscovy*. He travelled over great part of Europe, and seems to have been revered by many persons of rank and eminence, as a being of a superior order. He pretended that a black stone, or speculum, which he made great use of was brought him by angels, and that he was particularly intimate with Raphael and Gabriel. He is said to have written down what came from the mouths of the angels or demons that appeared in the speculum. His reputation as a Rosicrucian, was equal, at least, to that of Dr. Dee; but he was so unfortunate as to lose both his ears at Lancaster. It was confidently reported, that he raised a dead body in that county †. He was imprisoned for a cheat in Germany, a country which hath produced more dupes to alchymy than all the other nations in Europe.

He pretended, that he was enjoined by some of his friends, the angels, to have a "community of wives ‡." and he so strictly adhered to this injunction, that he seems to have made it a part of his religion. Kelly died miserably from the effects of a fall, in escaping from his confinement, in Germany; and Dee, very poor, at Mortlake, in Surry; the former in October, 1595; the latter in the year 1608, and the eighty-first of his age.

"The black stone into which Dr. Dee used to call his spirits" was in the collection of the earls of Peterborough, whence it came to lady Elizabeth Germaine. It was next the property of the late duke of Argyle, and is now Mr. Walpole's. It appears upon examination, to be nothing but a polished piece of canal coal. But this is what Butler means, when he says,

Kelly did all his feats upon
The devil's looking-glass, a stone.

JOHN BLA GRAVE; a small head, D. L. fecit. In the engraved title to "Planispherium Catholicum quod vulgo dicitur The Mathematical Jewel," &c. Lond. sumptibus Josephi Moxon, 4to. The editor was John Palmer, M. A. whose head is also in the title. There is another small head of the former in a ruff. His portrait is in the possession of George Blagrove Esq. of Bullmarsh Court.

John Blagrove, of Southcote, near Reading, in Berkshire, was the second son of John Blagrove, of Bullmarsh Court, near the village of Sunning, in that county. He was a man of a strong head and a benevolent heart; and had the honour of being an inventive genius. This excellent mathematician did not pursue phantoms, like Dee and Kelly, but reduced his speculations to practice; his friends, his neighbours, and the public reaped the fruits of his studies. His "Mathematical Jewel," which is in a great measure an original work, is his capital performance. He cut the figures for this book with his own hand, and they are well executed*. This gentleman who possessed an independent fortune, was not only distinguished by his knowledge in mathematics; he was, and is still known for his judicious charities. He died the 9th of August, 1611, and lies buried in St. Laurence's church in Reading, where a fine monument was erected to his memory. See more of him and doctor Dee, in the "Biographia Britannica."

* In his discourse to the reader, before his "Mathematical Jewel," he expresses himself thus: "Never give over at the first, though any thing seems hard, rather aske a little helpe: and if you desire to be excellent perfite in your instrument, abridge my whole worke, and you shall find it will stand you more fleede than twenty times reading. I have always done so with any booke I liked."

JOHN GERARDE; engraved by Wm. Rogers, for the first edit. of his "Herbal."

JOHN GERARDE; engraved by Payne, for Johnson's edition of the same book.

John Gerarde, a surgeon in London, was the greatest English botanist of his time. He was many years retained as chief gardener to lord Burleigh, who was himself a great lover of plants, and had the best collection of any nobleman in the kingdom: among these were many exotics, introduced by Gerarde. In 1597, he published his "Herbal," which was printed at the expence of J. Norton, who procured the figures from Frankfort, which were originally cut for Tabermontanus's "Herbal" in High Dutch. In 1633, Thomas Johnson, an apothecary, published an improved edition of Gerarde's book, which is still much esteemed*. The descriptions in this Herbal are plain and familiar; and both these authors have laboured more to make their readers understand the characters of the plants than to give them to understand that they knew any thing of Greek or Latin.

* Thomas Johnson, who, for his labours in this work, was honoured with a Dr. of physic's degree, by the university of Oxford, was lieut. col. to Sir Marmaduke Rawdon governor of Basing-house, in the civil wars. He set fire to the Grange near that fortress, which consisted of twenty houses, and killed and burnt about three hundred of Sir William Waller's men, wounded five hundred more, and took arms, ammunition, and provision, from the enemy. He died in Sept. 1644, of a wound which he received in a sally from the garrison.

ROGER ASCHAM; a small whole length; reading a letter to queen Elizabeth. In the engraved title to Mr. Elstob's edition of his "Epistles," M. Burgbers sc. Probably no portrait.

Roger Ascham, who was born at North Alerton, in Yorkshire, and educated at St. John's College, in Cambridge, was one of the brightest geniuses and politest scholars of his age. He was public orator of the university of Cambridge, and Latin secretary to Edward VI. queen Mary, and queen Elizabeth, the last of whom he taught to write a fine hand, and instructed in the Greek and Latin languages, of which he was a consummate master. His letters are valuable both for style and matter, and are almost the only classical work of that kind written by an Englishman *. The most perfect collection of them, which may be still enlarged, was that published by Mr. Elstob; but he had omitted the author's poems, which are printed in other editions. His "Schoolmaster" abounds with great good sense, as well as knowledge of ancient and modern history; it is also expressive of the great humanity of the author, who was for making the paths of knowledge as level and pleasant as possible, and for trying every gentle method of enlarging the mind and winning the heart. His "Toxophilus," a treatise of shooting in the long-bow, of which he was very fond, is rather whimsical. He seems to think, that a

ISAAC OLIVER; J. Oliver p. J. Millier sc. 4to. In the "Anecdotes of Painting;" 4to.

There never appeared in England, perhaps in the whole world, a greater master in miniature than Isaac Oliver. He painted a few pieces of history, but generally portraits; which have so much truth and delicacy, as never to have been equalled, but by the smaller works of Holbein. His pictures are marked with  $\Phi$ . He died in the reign of Charles I. Hilliard, his contemporary artist, painted history and portrait, but chiefly the latter. One of his most capital pieces was queen Elizabeth sitting on her throne. It is well known that this princess often sat to him. He drew with as much exactness as Isaac Oliver, but was greatly inferior to him in colouring.

CORNELIUS KETEL; T. Chambrars sc. 4to. In the "Anecdotes of Painting."

C. Ketel, a Dutch painter of history and portrait, was introduced to the queen by lord-chancellor Hatton, and had the honour of painting her picture. He also did portraits of several of the nobility. After his return to Holland, he laid aside his pencils, and painted with his fingers, and after that with his toes. This artist reminds me of the man who could thread a needle with his toes, and attempted to sew with them. He is said to have made but very bungling work.

FREDERIGO ZUCCHERO; Campiglia del' Billiy f. In the "Museum Florentinum."

FREDERIC ZUCCHERO; A Bannerman sc. 4to. ubi supra.

Frederic Zucchero, a celebrated Italian painter of history and portrait, had also the honour of painting the queen. Several of his portraits are engraved among the Illustrious Heads. There is a very grand composition by him, in the church of St. Angelo in Vado, the place of his nativity, of which I shall give a description, as I have seen it no where described. In the lower part of this piece, which is painted in the form of a large arch, is the angel Gabriel, revealing the birth of Christ to the Virgin. On the right and left, are the patriarchs and prophets who foretold that great event, with tablets in their hands, on which are inscribed their prophecies. In the upper part is heaven opened, and the Eternal Father in the midst of a large group of Seraphs, with his right-hand extended, in a posture of benediction, and grasping a globe with his left. Next below him is the Holy Ghost; and on each side the several orders of angels, supported by clouds, singing, and playing on various instruments of music. Just without the semi-circle of the arch, on the right and left, are Adam and Eve very conspicuous, in melancholy postures; intimating that the birth of the Messiah was for the redemption of fallen man. There is a fine print of this painting by Cornelius Cort, in two sheets, 1571. Ob. 1602.

HENRY CORNELIUS UROOM;

If. Oliver p. T. Chambers sc. 4to. In the "Anecdotes of Painting." His head is also in the Set of Painters, engraved by Hen. Hondius.

Uroom, who was a native of Harlem, was employed by lord Howard of Effingham, in drawing the designs of the tapestry, now in the house of lords, in which is represented the history of the engagements with the Spanish armada. There is a fine set of prints of this tapestry published by Pine, in 1739.

Marc Garrard, a native of Bruffels, painted history, landscape, architecture, and portrait; he also illuminated, and designed for glass-painters. His etchings of Esop's Fables, from which Barlow has frequently borrowed, are executed with great spirit. See the reign of Charles I.

Sir NATHANIEL BACON; se ipse p. Chambers sc. 4to. In the Anecdotes of Painting."

Sir Nathaniel Bacon, second son of Sir Nicholas Bacon, by his first lady, painted his own portrait, and a cook-maid with large and small fowls, in a masterly manner. Both these pictures are at Gorhambury, near St. Alban's. He was ancestor to the present lord Townshend.

THOMAS LANT, Gent. Æt. 32; a small oval head; before a very scarce and curious set of plates, about thirty-four in number, exhibiting the funeral procession of Sir Philip Sidney. It was designed by Lant, and engraved by Theodore de Brie.

The book of Prints to which this head is prefixed contains a considerable number of portraits. Lant was Portcullis pursuivant to queen Elizabeth, and author of a treatise on heraldry. He was some time servant to Sir Philip Sidney.

Theodore

Theodore de Brie, a native of Liege, who lived the greater part of his time at Frankfort, engraved Sir Philip Sidney's Funeral procession, at London. He also engraved the four first volumes of Boiffard's "Roman Antiquities," the fifth and last of which was executed by his sons Theodore and Israel, after his death. The prints for the two following books by Boiffard, were done by Theodore the father: Vitæ & "Icones Sultanorum Turcicorum & Principum Persarum." 1596, 4to. "Historia Chronologica Pannoniæ, cum Iconibus et Vitis Regum Christianorum et Turcicorum, a Gotardo Artho Dantiscano." He did the plates for "Crudelitates Hispanorum in India," small 4to. and for Hariot's "History of Virginia," in folio. His capital work is "Descriptio Indiæ Orientalis & Occidentalis," in nineteen parts, which is generally bound in five folios. He died about the year 1600. The heads in Boiffard's "Bibliotheca Chalcographica," were engraved by Theodore the son. It appears to me, that these are all copies, taken, for the most part, from frontispieces to books.

Dr. RICHARD HAYDOCKE, engraved the prints for his translation of Lomatus's "Art of Painting," as he tells us himself, in the preface to that book. See Class IX.

gate, under which he had a shop. But his largest shop was at the west door of St. Paul's. He printed the Bible, dedicated to Edward VI. fol. 1549. He also printed Latimer's Sermons*; Several editions of the Book of Martyrs; Tindale's Works, in one vol. folio, 1572; some of Roger Ascham's pieces, and many other things of less note.

He died on the 23d of July, 1584, and lies buried in the parish church of Little Bradley, in Suffolk. It is intimated in his epitaph, that Fox undertook that laborious work of "Acts and Monuments" at his instance:

"He set a Fox to write how martyrs runne

He had thirteen children by each of his two wives. The second, who survived him, was of a gentleman's family at Little Bradley, and erected the monument there to his memory.

That author says of him, that he had a shop, at the sign of the Rose, in St. Paul's Church-yard. The most considerable of the books printed by him are, the Bible, fol. 1551, and "Don Alexis of Piemont his Secrets," 1580, 4to. This book was well known throughout Europe, RICHARD JONES, alias Ihones, or Iohnes; a small wood print, like that in Ames's "Typographical Antiquities," p. 345; round cap, gown, &c.

Richard Jones printed in partnership with Thomas Colwell, in the year 1570, and afterwards with others. He had several shops, one of which was at the south-west door of St. Paul's church. This quarter of the town was more considerable than any other for printers and bookfellers.

Frances, countess of Suffex, was sister to Sir Henry Sidney, lord-deputy of Ireland, and relict of Thomas Ratcliffe, earl of Suffex. She left by will 5000 l. besides her goods unbequeathed; for the erection of the college in Cambridge called after her name. Ob. 9 Mar. 1588.

When the earl of Effex was in the height of favour with the queen, she presented him with a ring, telling him at the same time, "That whatever he should commit, she would par“don him, if he returned that pledge.” When he lay under sentence of death, this ring was delivered to the countess of Nottingham, who undertook to carry it to the queen; but at the instance of her husband, the earl’s avowed enemy, she betrayed her trust. This she confessed to Elizabeth, as she lay on her death-bed. The strong passions of that princess were instantly agitated; the high-spirited Essex was now regarded as a suppliant; every spark of resentment was extinguished; the amiable man, the faithful servant, the injured lover, and the unhappy victim, now recurred to her thoughts; threw her into the most violent agonies of grief, and hastened her death.

It was chiefly compiled by Mr. Anderson; but the late earl of Egmont had a great hand in this very laborious and expensive work. The book was so rare, that a copy has been known to sell at an auction for four guineas*.

Catharine Bretterg, a woman of uncommon beauty and most exemplary piety, was daughter of Mr. John Bruen, of Bruen Stapleford, in Cheshire, and sister to a pious gentleman of the same name, whose character, which is similar to her own, hath been mentioned in the course of this work. She was, in the twentieth year of her age, married to Mr. William Bretterg, of Bretterghold, near Liverpool, in Lancashire, with whom she lived in the most perfect harmony for about two years; when to the regret of all that knew her worth, she was snatched out of the world by a fever, on the 31st of May, 1601. She had on her death-bed some misgivings of mind as to her spiritual state; but these idle dreams, the effects of her distemper, presently vanished; and she died exulting in the hopes of a happy immortality.

REMARKS ON DRESS, &amp;c.

We are informed by Hentzner *, that the English, in the reign of Elizabeth, cut the hair close on the middle of the head, but suffered it to grow on either side.

As it is usual in dress, as in other things, to pass from one extreme to another, the large jutting coat became quite out of fashion in this reign, and a coat was worn resembling a waist-coat.

The men's ruffs were generally of a moderate size, the women's bore a proportion to their farthingales, which were enormous.

We are informed that some beaux had actually introduced long swords and high ruffs, which approached the royal standard. This roused the jealousy of the queen who appointed officers to break every man's sword, and to clip all ruffs which were beyond a certain length †.

The breeches, or to speak more properly, drawers, fell far short of the knees, and the defect was supplied with long hose, the tops of which were fastened under the drawers.

William, earl of Pembroke, was the first who wore knit stockings in England, which <sup>In 1564</sup> were introduced in this reign. They were presented to him by William Rider, an apprentice near London Bridge, who happened to see a pair brought from Mantua, at an Italian merchant's in the city, and made a pair exactly like them ‡.

† Townshend's "Journals," p. 250.

‡ See Stow's "Chron." p. 269.

Edward Vere, the seventeenth earl of Oxford, was the first that introduced embroidered gloves and perfumes into England, which he brought from Italy. He presented the queen with a pair of perfumed gloves, and her portrait was painted with them upon her hands *.

At this period was worn a hat of a singular form, which resembled a close-stool pan with a broad brim †. Philip II. in the former reign, seems to wear one of these utensils upon his head, with a narrower brim than ordinary, and makes at least as grotesque an appearance, as his countryman Don Quixote with the barber's basin ‡.

The reverend Mr. John More of Norwich, one of the worthiest clergyman in the reign of Elizabeth, gave the best reason that could be given, for wearing the longest and largest beard of any Englishman of his time; namely, "That no act of his life might be unworthy of the gravity of his appearance §." I wish as good a reason could always have been assigned for wearing the longest hair, and the longest or largest wig ||.

It was ordered in the first year of Elizabeth, that no fellow of Lincoln's Inn "should wear any beard of above a fortnight's growth ¶."

* Stow's "Annals" p. 686.

† This indecent idea forcibly obtrudes itself; and I am under a kind of necessity of using the comparison, as I know nothing else that in any degree resembles it. See the head of the earl of Morton, by Houbraken. &c.

¶ Dugdale's "Origines Juridiciales."

As the queen left no less than three thousand different habits in her wardrobe when she died*, and was possessed of the dresses of all countries, it is somewhat strange that there is such a uniformity of dress in her portraits, and that she should take a pleasure in being loaded with ornaments.

At this time the stays, or boddice, were worn long-waisted. Lady Hunston, the foremost of the ladies in the procession to Hunston house, appears with a much longer waist than those that follow her. She might possibly have been a leader of the fashion, as well as of the procession.

Maximilian II. son of Ferdinand, brother to Charles V was engaged in a very troublesome war with the Turks, which was renewed in the reign of Rodolph his son. He was a munificent patron of learned men; and the greatest master of languages of any prince, if not of any man of his time, being able to speak no less than eight with facility. He was elected king of Poland; but his death prevented his taking possession of that kingdom. Ob. 12 Oct. 1576.

RODOLPHUS II. a large medallion; ubi supra.

Rodolph II. son of Maximilian II. was unsuccessful in his wars with the Turks, who took from him a considerable part of Hungary. He was a friend to arts and learning in general, particularly to painters and mathematicians. He made a collection of pictures, at an immense expence, from all parts of Europe; and had the pleasure of seeing the arts flourish under his own eye, in Germany. John Raphael, and Giles Sadeler, who are deservedly reckoned among the best engravers of their time, were patronized by him. The most eminent of these brethren was Giles, or Ægidius*, who was exceeded by none of the workmen of that age. Ob. 1612, Æt. 59.

CHARLES IX. roy de France. One of the Set of the Kings of France, by Jaques de Bie; b. sh.

Charles IX. king of France, was a prince equally perfidious and cruel †. After he had made peace with the Hugonots, and lulled them into a profound security, he ordered a general slaughter to be made of them at Paris, at the celebration of the king of Navarre's marriage. This bloody massacre will be a stain in the annals of the French nation, to the end of time. The English court went into mourning upon this melancholy occasion, and the most undisssembled sorrow sat on every countenance, when

HENRY IV. &c. One of the fet of the gallery of illuftrious men, in the Palais Cardinal, now called the Palais Royal; b. fb.

There are feveral portraits of him in the Luxemburg Gallery.

The capacity of Henry IV. was equally adapted to peace or war. France, which had been harraffed and torn by civil wars for near half a century, had an interval of refofe under this great prince, who, by the affiftance of the duke of Sully, one of the moft able, induftrious, and faithful minifters that ever ferved a king, brought order into the finances, encouraged agriculture and the manual arts, and laid the foundation of that power and grandeur to which the French monarchy afterwards rose. The bishop of Rodez, in his "Life of Henry," intimates, that his extravagant passion for the female sex, was the occasion of his death. He, in 1610, was assassinated by Raviliac, a lay Jesuit.

FREDERICK VI. duke of Wirtembergh, &c. was eleèted knight of the Garter in this reign. He was invested with the ensigns of the order by Robert lord Spencer, of Wormleighton, 1603, he having been sent into Germany, by king James for that purpose. His portrait is at Hampton Court; and there is a print of him in a quarto volume which I have seen. It was written in Latin by Erhardus Cellius, and contains a particular account of the order of the Garter and the investiture of the duke, and is interspersed with variety of memoirs relative to Frederic and his family. It is intitled "Equitis Aurati Anglo Wirtembergici, Libri VIII. seu Actus, quo Jacobus I. R. A. Fredericum, D. Wirtemb. solennibus Ceremoniis Equitem Auratum declaravit." Tubingæ, 1605, 4to. This prince was deservedly styled "the Magnanimous." Upon the demise of his uncle, Lewis III. he recovered the duchy of Wirtembergh, and shook off the dominion of the house of Austria. He was more than once in England in quality of ambassador. Ob. 29 Jan. 1608.

five years younger than Elizabeth. He had made some progress in his suit with that princess, before he came into England*, and had a secret interview with her at Greenwich, in which, though his person was not advantageous, he gained considerably upon her affections. He came into England a second time, the same year, and was graciously received by her. On the anniversary of her coronation, she publicly took a ring from her finger, and put it on the duke's. This wise princess was very near being the dupe of her passions; but, after a long struggle betwixt her reason and her love, she reluctantly yielded to the former, and the match was broken off.

It hath been observed, that queen Elizabeth had much better have married the tailor who died for love of her than the duke of Anjou †.

CECILIA, Marchioness of Baden, and sister of Eric, king of Sweden, was here in the reign of Elizabeth ‡. Her print is in Leti's "Elizabetha," tom. i. Helena, Marquess of Northampton, to whom Spencer dedicated his "Daphnida," was in her retinue, as appears from her monument in Salisbury cathedral.

* When the French commissioners were sent to make their proposals of marriage betwixt Elizabeth and this prince, they were attended by a great train of the French nobility, in all the pomp and glitter of dress. The English vied with them upon this occasion, and the court was never seen so brilliant. Jests and tournaments were celebrated, in which the prime nobility were challengers; and a magnificence was displayed in this romantic solemnity, superior to what had been seen in the time of Henry VIII.

† It must be a matter of concern to a true antiquary, that the name of this ill-starred wight was never recorded. Osborne mentions his disastrous passion, styling him "that taylor reported to have whined away himself for the love of queen Elizabeth." Osborne's Works, p. 54, edit. 9.

The duke of FERIA; an etching; collar of the Golden Fleece; cloak; half len. 12mo.

Don Gomez Suarez, de Figueros y Cordova, came into England with king Philip, and was afterwards created duke of FERIA in Spain. He married Jane, daughter of Sir William Dormer, knight of the Bath, maid of honour to queen Mary, and sister of the first baron Dormer of Wenge in the county of Bucks. He was employed in several embassies from Philip to Elizabeth, in the beginning of her reign; and was much incensed against her for not suffering his wife's grandmother, and other catholics, to reside in the Low Countries, and preserve their estates and effects in England.

In Leti's "Elizabetta," tom. i. is a print of Don DIEGO GUZMAN DE SILVA, ambassador from Philip II. in 1564.

There is also a print of POMPONE DE BELLIEVRE, chancellor of France; it is a large quarto engraved by Boisservin.

He was sent into England in the quality of ambassador by Henry IV. as was also the marquis of Rosni, mentioned in the next reign.

HARRALD HUITFELD; Sylang sc. octavo size. In Hofman's "Portraits Historiques des Hommes illustres de Dannemarcke," part i.

Harrald Huitfeld, lord of Odisberg, chancellor and senator of the kingdom of Denmark, was advanced to the important office of principal secretary of state, when he was but twenty-six years of age. In 1597, he, together with Christian Bernekau, was sent ambassador to the English court. He was charged to propose a renewal of the former treaties betwixt the two crowns; to complain of the depredations of the English English privateers upon the Danish merchants, and to offer his master's mediation in negotiating a peace between England and Spain. The queen readily contented to a renewel of the treaties, and promised to make restitution for the damages done by the privateers, and to put a stop to their hostilities, provided that the subjects of the king of Denmark would no longer supply her enemies with warlike stores. Her majesty waved the overture of mediating a peace between England and Spain, alleging, that if the Spanish monarch were desirous of putting an end to the war, he should propose it himself. Chancellor Huitfeld stands high on the list of historians. His "Histories of Denmark and Norway" are his capital works. The best edition of the former is in two volumes folio. He died the 16th of December 1608, aged fifty-nine years.

Christian Friis, lord of Borreby, was sent ambassador into England by Frederic II. king of Denmark, in the reign of Elizabeth; and by Christian IV. in the next reign. He was eminent as a scholar, and distinguished himself in the higher provinces of business. Christian, after his worth had been sufficiently tried, raised him to the great office of chancellor. He died the 29th of June, 1616.

William du Bartas an eminent French poet, and a gallant soldier, was agent for the king of Navarre, afterwards Henry IV. at the courts of England and Scotland. He was sent an agent into the latter kingdom, with a view of bringing about a match betwixt Henry's sister and James VI*. James did his utmost to prevail with him to enter into his service, but he was too strongly attached to Henry. He has been ranked, by some, with the modern heroic poets of the first form; a distinction to which he is by no means intitled †. Though Sylvester got more reputation by translating the "Weeks and Works of Du Bartas" than by all his own compositions, he has been justly accused of debasing the original with false wit. One of the most considerable of Du Bartas's works is his poem on the memorable battle of Ivry, won by the king his master in 1590.

PIERRE de BOURDEILLE Seigneur de Brantôme: J. V. Schley sc. 1740, 12mo. In the 15th tome of his works.

Peter Bourdeille, abbé of Brantôme, by which name he is generally distinguished, was, in the former part of his life, a man of uncommon curiosity and spirit, which carried him not only through most parts of Europe, but into Africa and Greece. He enjoyed the countenance and favour of several royal and noble personages; and was an acute and nice observer of men and manners; but was particularly inquisitive into the character and conduct of the female sex. He is best known to the world as the biographer of gallant and illustrious women, and has given us memoirs of some great ladies whom he personally knew, and drawn their principal and most characteristic features from the life. For this he was particularly qualified in the instance of his unhappy mistress, Mary, queen of Scots, whom he saw in the morning of her beauty, and admired in the meridian of her splendor; nor was he a stranger to that thick and settled cloud of misfortune, guilt, and misery that almost totally eclipsed the remainder of her life. He, together with several of the French nobility, accompanied Mary to Scotland, and returning to France through England, was, by his curiosity, detained some time in London. He died about the year 1600. The reader who is inclined to know more of his personal history, is referred to the account of him prefixed to the 15th tome of his works or to his article in Moreri's Dictionary *." In Jebb's 2d folio "De Vita et Rebus gestis Mariæ Scotorum Reginæ," occurs all that Brantôme has written of this princess. "Mary Stuart, queen of Scots, being the secret History of her Life, &c. translated from the French;" 8vo. 2d edit. 1726, is, as I am informed, from the original of the same author.

FRANCISCUS GOMARUS, Theologiæ Primarius Professor. In Meursius's "Athenæ Batavæ, sive de Urbe Leideni et Academia, Virisque claris," &c. 1625, 4to. Most of the heads in this volume have been copied in the Continuation of Beiffard."

* See BOURDEILLE,

Francis Gomarus, an eminent divine and orientalist, was born at Bruges in 1563, and educated at Strasburg, under the celebrated John Sturmius. In 1582, he came over to England, and heard the theological lectures of Dr. Reynolds at Oxford, and Dr. Whitaker at Cambridge. He was professor of divinity at Leyden, read publicly in that science in Middleburg, had the divinity chair at Saumur, and lastly, was professor of divinity and Hebrew at Groningen, where he died, on the 11th of January, 1641. He was a great antagonist of Arminius, with whom he disputed before the States of Holland. He gained great reputation by revising the Dutch translation of the Bible. His works were printed at Amsterdam, in folio, 1645.

LUCAS TRELCATIUS, Pater, &c.
4to. In Meursius's "Athen. Bat."

Lucas Trelcatius, the Elder, was a divine of eminent learning and piety, who, in the early part of his life, suffered greatly by renouncing the Romish religion, in which he had been educated. Threatened and terrified by the civil war which raged in Flanders, he sheltered himself in England, where he taught school with great reputation, for eight years. He was afterwards minister of the French church at Leyden, and professor of divinity in that university. He died in 1602, aged sixty. His son Lucas, who was born in England, and was also a divine of eminence, succeeded him in the professorship, and died at Leyden 1607, in the thirty-fourth year of his age. His print is also in "Athen. Bat."

PETRUS

PETRUS BERTIUS, Collegii illust. Ordinum Regens, (in Academia Leidenfi) 4to. In "Athen. Bat."

Peter Bertius, a very learned and eminent divine, was born in Flanders, and brought into England, when he was but three months old, by his parents, who dreaded the persecution which then prevailed in the Low Countries. He received the rudiments of his excellent education in the suburbs of London, under Christian Rychius, and Petronia Lansberg his learned daughter-in-law. He afterwards studied at Leyden, with unwearied diligence and a suitable proficiency, and was, for his distinguished merit, appointed regent of the college of the States. He was author of several theological treatises, and of a volume or two of Poems and Orations. He published "Gorlæus's Cabinet of Medals," to which were added plates of Roman coins, not to be found in Fulvius Urfinus.

JOHANNES, DRUSIUS, Linguae Sanctæ Professor, (in Academia Leidenfi) 4to. In "Athen. Bat."

John Drufius, commonly called Vander Driefche, whose parents were also driven into England by the persecution in the Low Countries, was, for his knowledge in Greek and the oriental languages, equal, at least, to any divine of his age. He was a member of Merton college, in Oxford, and was admitted to the degree of bachelor of arts, having continued four years in that house, and read Hebrew, Chaldee, or Syriac lectures. He was mighty in the Scriptures as appears by his Commentaries, a great

great part of which are in the "Critici Sacri." I have placed him here among the divines celebrated by Meursius, as, in 1576, he was chosen Hebrew professor at Leyden, and was afterwards elected professor at Franeker, where he continued many years, and died the 12th of February, 1615-16, in the sixty-sixth year of his age.

PETRUS MOLINEUS, Philosophiæ Naturalis Professor, (in Academia Leidenfi) 4to. In "Athen. Bat."

Peter du Moulin fled from the persecution of the Protestants in France, to pursue his studies in England, where he cultivated an acquaintance with the famous Reynolds and Whitaker, men of a similar character with his own, as he was much more a divine than a naturalist. He died at Sedan, in 1658, in the ninetieth year of his age. One of his theological works is "Defensio Fidei Catholicæ pro serenissimo Majoris Britanniæ Rege Jacobo."

DOMINICUS BAUDIUS, J. C. et Historiarum Professor. In "Athen. Bat." 4to.

Dominicus Baudius, professor of history in the university of Leyden, was a man of general learning; but he particularly shone in polite literature. He had a happy vein of poetry; was master of a good Latin style, which though not of the purest kind, was, in elegance at least, superior to that of most of the moderns. He was some time one of the advocates at the Hague, and afterwards admitted an advocate in the parliament of Paris. He was twice in England in this reign, where great respect was paid him by several persons of learning and politeness, liteness, especially by Sir Philip Sidney. His excellence as a man of wit and a scholar, may be seen in his "Letters" and his "Amours*," which strongly mark his character, and his weakness in regard to wine and women. This sometimes brought him into ridiculous distresses, and exposed him to the contempt of such as were every way his inferiors but in point of prudence. He died the 22d of August, 1613.

PAULUS MERULA, J. C. et Historiarum Professor; 4to. In. "Athen. Bat."

Paul Merula, an eminent Dutch lawyer, was successor to the celebrated Justus Lipsius, in the professorship of history at Leyden. It is a sufficient encomium on him, to say that he was deemed worthy to succeed so great a man. Meursius, who informs us that he was in England, has given a list of his works, which are chiefly on historical subjects. Ob. 1607, Æt. 49.

JANUS DOUSA, Academie Curator, &c. 4to. In "Athen. Bat."

Janus Doussa the elder was the first curator of the university of Leyden, which he bravely defended against the Spaniards as a governor, and ably presided over as a scholar. He was author of various Latin poems, and of the "Annals of Holland" in verse and prose, and wrote notes upon several classic authors, as did also his son Janus, though he died at the age of twenty-six years. He had three other sons who distinguished themselves as men of letters. The father died of the plague in 1604. He is placed here as having travelled into England.

DANIEL HEINSIUS, Bibliothecarius et Politices Professor, (in Academia Leidenfi) 4to. In "Athen. Bat." "Quantum est quod nescimus," at the top of the oval.

Daniel Heinsius, to whom "Quantum est quod scimus" may more aptly be applied, was one of the most learned and ingenious men of his age and country. He was author of Poems in Greek, Latin, and Dutch, and wrote Latin notes and interpretations on several capital Greek authors. He was very young when he came into England in the reign of Elizabeth His son Nicholas was also an ingenious poet and philologer.

FRANCISCUS RAPHELENGIUS, &c. In "Athen. Bat." 4to.

Francis Raphelengius, a Fleming, celebrated for his skill in the oriental languages, studied at Paris, whence he was driven by the civil wars into England, where he taught Greek in the university of Cambridge. He was, for a considerable time corrector of the press to the famous Christopher Plantin *, whose daughter he married. He had a great hand in the famous Antwerp Bible, published in the original Hebrew by Benedictus Arius Montanus, with an interlineary version. He made a great proficiency in the Arabic, and composed a Dictionary in that language. In the latter part of his life, he resided at Leyden, where the Hebrew professorship was conferred upon him by the curators of that university. The many notes and corrections which he did for the learned works printed by Plantin, to which he was too modest to affix his name, were sufficient to have transf-

JANUS * GRUTERUS, &c. Ob. 20 Septembris, 1627; four Latin verses, b. sb.

Janus Gruterus, a native of Antwerp, and one of the most laborious and voluminous writers of his time, was, when a child, brought into England by his parents. His mother who is said to have been an English woman, and whose name was Catharine Tishem, was his first tutor, being perfectly qualified for that employment, as she was one of the most learned women of the age. She is said to have superintended his education, for several years, at Cambridge. He afterwards studied at Leyden, where he took his doctor's degree in the civil law, but soon quitted that study, and addicted himself to philology and history. He wrote notes upon the Roman historians and several of the poets; published all the works of Cicero with notes, a book once in great esteem, but it hath since given place to the edition of Grævius, as that hath to Olivet's. His Flo- " rilegium magnum, seu Polyanthea," is a voluminous common-place book, formerly valued as a treasure. His "Chronicon Chronicorum" is a proof of his industry in history; but the chief of all his performances is his "Collection of "ancient Inscriptions," a work not only estimable for the historical knowledge contained in it, but because it throws the clearest light upon a multitude of obscure passages in classic authors. It would be superfluous to mention his "Lampas Critica †," supposed to be hurled at

ABRAHAM ORTELIUS; thus inscribed.

“Orbi spectandum Galleus * Ortelium.”

Frontispiece to his “Theatrum Orbis,” 1603; fol. to which is prefixed his life. There is a copy of this head in the “Continuation of Boissard.”

Abraham Ortelius, the celebrated geographer, was a sojourner at Oxford in the reign of Edward VI. and came a second time into England in 1577. His “Theatrum Orbis” was the completest work of the kind that had ever been published, and gained him a reputation equal to his immense labour in compiling it. The world was not only obliged to him for this very estimable book, but also for the “Britannica,” which he first persuaded Camden to undertake. Ob. 1598.

MATTHIAS de LOBEL, &c. Dela-ram sc.

Matthias Lobel, a Flemish physician, was one of the greatest botanists of his time. He spent the latter part of his life in England, where he published his “Stirpium Adversaria,” 1570, * Galle, the engraver of this head, did a plate for Ortelius of the death of the Virgin, which is esteemed by the curious one of the most elegant productions of that age. The print, which is very scarce, is inscribed; “Sic Petri Brugelii archetypum Gal-fol. in which work he was assisted by Peter Pena. In 1576, he re-published the same book, with considerable additions. He was also author of an Herbal in the Dutch language, and was engaged in another great work, which he did not live to finish. Gerarde, who was his intimate friend, has followed the method of the "Ad-versaria," in his Herbal. The name of Lobel is familiar to all botanists, and affixed to the names of many plants, as characteristical of their species. The time of his death is not known. He calls himself an old man, in his Latin epistle addressed to Gerarde, 1597, and prefixed to his Herbal.

CAROLUS CLUSIUS, Clariss. Botanicus Professor honor. 4to. In "Athen. Bat." There is a neat print of him in Boissard.

Charles Clusius, a native of Arras, who ranks in the first class of botanists, pursued his favourite study with all that ardour which is necessary to a conqueror of the vegetable kingdom, and without a degree of which, no man ever rose to eminence in any art, science or profession*. He, with a principal view to botany, travelled over France, Spain, Portugal, Germany, Hungary, England, and Holland †, where he at length settled, in consequence of an ho-

It carried our countryman Ray through most parts of Europe; improved his health, cheered and prolonged his life, and amply rewarded him for his labours, by the mere pleasure of the pursuit. It made Lister incomparably more happy under a hedge in Languedoc, than when he saw the romantic beauties of Versailles though recommended by all the charms of novelty §.

nourable invitation from the curators of the university of Leyden. He died in 1609, aged eighty-four years. Tournefort, who has given the best account of him, informs us, that he was chief gardener to the emperors Maximilian II. and Rodolph his son, and that he excelled all his predecessors in botany, and was also well versed in history and cosmography, and master of eight languages. He occasionally delineated the figures of plants with great readiness. His botanic works are in two volumes; the first contains 1133 figures of plants, the second consists chiefly of fruits and animals.

ORLANDUS LASSUS, &c. In Boiffard,

Orlandus Laffus, who, when a boy, was several times spirited away from his parents for the excellence of his voice, was chief musician to Albert and William, successively dukes of Bavaria. He was, for his great musical talents, ennobled by the emperor Maximilian II. who equally admired his singing and his compositions, in both which he was without a rival. He travelled into France and England, and died at Monaco, in Italy, in 1585. If he had travelled over every nation in Europe, he would probably have found, that both his sacred and profane pieces were performed in all its languages.

The apotheosis of JAMES I. It is in the ceiling of the Banqueting House at Whitehall, and is engraved in three sheets by Gribelin, after Rubens.

The love of peace seems to have been the ruling passion in JAMES I.* To this he sacrificed almost every principle of sound policy. He was eminently learned, especially in divinity; and was better qualified to fill a professor's chair, than a throne. His speculative notions of regal power were as absolute as those of an eastern monarch; but he wanted that vigour and firmness of mind which was necessary to reduce them to practice. His consciousness of his own

* He is said to have been painted abroad with a scabbard without a sword, and with a sword which no body could draw, though several were pulling at it †. Sir Kenelm Digby imputes the strong aversion James had to a drawn sword to the fright his mother was in, during her pregnancy, at the sight of the swords with which David Rizzio, her secretary, was assassinated in her presence. "Hence it came," says this author, "that her son, king James, had such an aversion, all his life-time, to a naked sword; that he could not see one without a great emotion of the spirits, although otherwise courageous enough; yet he could not over-master his passions in this particular. I remember, when he dubbed me knight, in the ceremony of putting the point of a naked sword upon my shoulder, he could not endure to look upon it, but turned his face another way; insomuch that, in lieu of touching my shoulder, he had almost thrust the point into my eyes, had not the duke of Buckingham guided his hand aright †." I shall only add to what sir Kenelm has observed, that James discovered so many marks of pusillanimity, when the sword was at a distance from him, that it is needless, in this case, to alledge that an impression was made upon his tender frame before he saw the light. Sir Kenelm might as well have told us, that it was owing to as early a sympathetic impression that this prince was so great an admirer of handsome men. Sir Anthony Weldon says, that "he naturally loved not the sight of a soldier, nor any valiant man."

weakness in the exertion of his prerogative, drew from him this confession: "That though

 " the country which he governed." But if all restraints on his prerogative had been taken off, and he could have been in reality, that abstract-been a tyrant. See Class IX.

Robert Cecil was youngest son of William, lord Burleigh. He was one of the principal secretaries of state to queen Elizabeth, and master of the court of wards. Upon the accession of James, he was constituted sole secretary of state; and in the sixth year of his reign, lord-treasurer. He discharged his high offices with great abilities; and was indeed, in industry and capacity scarce inferior to his father; but more artful, more insinuating, and far more insincere. King James used to call him his "Little Beagle," alluding to the many discoveries he made, of which he sent him intelligence. Ob. 24 May, 1612*.

THOMAS HOWARD, comes Suffolciæ, & totius Angliæ thesaurarius; R. Elstracke sc. small 4to.

Cr. 1603. Thomas Howard, earl of Suffolk, was son of Thomas, fourth duke of Norfolk; by his second dutcheſs Margaret, daughter and heir of Thomas lord Audley of Walden. He was one of the volunteers in the memorable engagement with the Spanish armada, in 1588, and afterwards in the expedition to Cadiz; on both which occasions he gave signal proofs of his courage. He was, soon after the accession of James, created earl of Suffolk; was afterwards constituted lord-chamberlain of the household, and in 1614, lord-treasurer of England. In 1619, he was dismissed from his office, and fined 30,000 l. for taking bribes, and embezzling the king's treasure; crimes more imputable to his countess than himself. His ruin was, with great probability, supposed to be involved with that of his son-in-law, the earl of Somerset. The prints are scarce, as the plates were engraved for one of the descendants of the lord-treasurer. EDWARD SOMERSET, earl of Worcester, &c. lord privy-seal; S. Passaus sc. 1618; 4to.

The earl of Worcester was one of the most <sup>Cr. 1514,</sup> accomplished gentlemen in the courts of queen Elizabeth and James I. In his youth, he was remarkable for his athletic constitution, and distinguished himself by the manly exercises of riding and tilting, in which he was perhaps superior to any of his contemporaries. In the 43d of Eliz. he was appointed master of the horse; which office he resigned in the 13th of James, and was made lord privy-seal. Ob. 3 Mar. 1627-8. He was ancestor to the present duke of Beaufort.

HENRY VERE, earl of Oxford, lord high-chamberlain; RV in a cypher; sold by Compton Holland; 4to.

His portrait is at Welbeck.

The earl of Oxford, who had been a dissolute and debauched young man, was, when the fervour of his youth abated, one of the most distinguished characters of his time. He was ever among the foremost to do his country service, in the senate, or the field; was one of the few among the nobility, who dared to check the prerogative; and could not forbear giving vent to his indignation, when he saw the king's tameness with respect to the Palatinate, in such terms as occasioned his being sent to the Tower. Though he inherited all the martial ardour of his family, he could never exert it in this reign, but in attempting impossibilities. He was one of the "handful of men" who went under Sir Horace Vere, against the great army of Spinola*; and headed a party of brave soldiers in a desperate attack on the impregnable works of that general, at Terheiden; in which he exerted himself so much, that it threw him into a fever, which soon put an end to his life.

His portrait, by Mytens, is at Hampton Court.

* The portraits of the chief of them, by Mierevelt, are at lord Townshend's, at Rayaham, in Norfolk.

The earl of Nottingham, who in the late reign made so great a figure as a sea-officer, was, in this, employed as an ambassador; the pacific king thinking he could do as much by negotiation, as Elizabeth did by fighting. In his embassy to Spain, he was attended by a splendid train of five hundred persons. The ignorant Spaniards, who had heard much of the Kentish long-tails, and other monsters, in this nation of heretics, were astonished when he made his public entry, not only at seeing the human form, but at seeing it in superior health and beauty to what it appeared in, in their own country*.

The duke of Buckingham, by the elegance of his person †, and the courtliness of his address, presently gained as great an ascendancy over James, as the favourite of any other prince

* It is observable, that Monf. Buffon includes the seat of beauty within a certain latitude, so as just to take in all France, and exclude England. One would imagine, that he formed his ideas of the persons of the English from the vile portraits of some of their engravers.

† It was for his fine face that the king usually called him Stenny, which is the diminutive of Stephen. He, by this appellation, paid a very singular compliment to the splendour of his beauty, alluding to Acts vi. v. 15, where it is said of St. Stephen, "A I that sat in the council looking stedfastly on him, saw his face as it had been the face of an angel." Some of the duke's compliments and expressions of fervility to the king, were no less singular in their kind: one of his letters concludes with, "Your faithful Dog STENNY."

is known to have done, by a long course of affiduity and insinuation. It is no wonder that an accumulation of honour, wealth, and power, upon a vain man, suddenly raised from a private station, should be so invidious; and especially as the duke was as void of prudence and moderation in the use of these, as the fond king was in bestowing them. But it must be acknowledged, that this great man was not without his virtues. He had all the courage and sincerity of a soldier: and was one of those few courtiers who were as honest and open in their enmity, as military men are in their friendship. He was the last reigning favourite that ever tyrannized in this kingdom *. See the next reign.

A Great OFFICER of SCOTLAND.

LODOWICK, duke of Richmond, lord great-chamberlain, and admiral of Scotland, &c. Simon Passæus sc. 4to. See the next division.

* There is still a tradition in Spain, that the duke of Buckingham, who had ever a violent propensity to intrigue, was very particular in his addresses to the countess of Olivares, who made an ample discovery of his gallantry to her husband. Upon which it was concerted betwixt them, that the countess should make the duke an assignation, and substitute a girl who had been long infected with an infamous distemper, in her place. The assignation was accordingly made, and the effect fully answered their expectation. This story, supposing it a fact, which lord Clarendon will not allow, accounts for the duke's avowing the most determined enmity against Olivares, at parting from him; and is similar to his conduct in France, where he had the temerity to be as particular in his addresses to Anne of Austria, queen of Lewis XIII. Arthur Wilson plainly hints at this piece of secret history, which passed current in his time. See Wilson's Life of James I. in Kennet's "Complete Hist." vol. ii. p. 773.

LODOWICK, duke of Richmond and Lennox (or LENNOX), lord steward of his majesty's household; P. V. S. (Paul van Somer) p. fo. Barra sc. 1624; whole length; large b. sb. very scarce and fine. Promot. 1
Nov. 1615.

At the earl of Pomfret's, at Easton, was a portrait of him by Rubens. There is one at Gorhambury. But the most considerable is the excellent whole length of him, by Van Somer, at Petworth.

This nobleman was son to Esme Stuart, duke of Lennox in Scotland, and grandson to John, lord D'Aubigne, younger brother to Matthew, earl of Lennox, who was grandfather to king James. On the seventeenth of May, 21 of James I. he was created earl of Newcastle, and duke of Richmond. He had a great share of the king's confidence and esteem, which indeed he merited; as he was a man of an excellent character. He married three wives: his first was of the family of Ruthven; his second of that of Campbell; and his last, Frances, daughter of Thomas, viscount Howard of Bindon. He died suddenly, 1623. His dutchess assigned a very particular reason for his being in high health the night before he was found dead in his bed †.

There is a copy of this print before "The Cases of Impotency," printed by Curle. It was engraved by Michael Vandergucht.

ROBERT CAR, earl of Somerset; Houbraken sc. Illust. Head.

This portrait, which represents him as a black robust man, is not genuine. The earl of Somerset had light hair, and a reddish beard*. His face was rather effeminate; a kind of beauty which took much with James the First.

At Newbottle, the marquis of Lothian's, not far from Edinburgh, is a head of him, with small features and flaxen hair.

Robert Car was page to king James before his accession to the throne of England, and was, at his coronation, made one of the knights of the Bath. This circumstance is contradictory to the story so confidently told by several of our historians, of his introduction to the king at a tilting, about eight years after †. He was afterwards created viscount Rochester, and earl of Somerset; and was advanced to the office of lord-chamberlain. On the death of the earl of Salisbury, he became prime minister, and dispenser of the king's favours; and had the prudence to shew a due regard to the English, without slighting his own countrymen. His talents were neither shining, nor mean; and he was habitually a courtier and a statesman. In

He was generous, open, and sincere; loyal, and yet a friend to liberty. Few men possessed a greater quickness of apprehension, or a more penetrating judgment; and none could express themselves with more readiness or propriety. He was a man of letters himself, and an eminent patron of learned men. But he had, with all his excellencies, a strong propensity to pleasure, and frequently abandoned himself to women. FRANCIS MANNERS, earl of Rutland; sold by T. Jenner; 4to.

Cr. 1525.

The earl of Rutland, chief justice in Eyre of all the king's forests and chaces north of Trent, and knight of the Garter. In 1616, he attended the king to Scotland, and afterwards commanded the fleet sent to bring prince Charles out of Spain. The calamities, supposed to be the effects of witchcraft, in the earl's family, are said to have occasioned the famous act of parliament in this reign, against forcery, and other diabolical practices, which was lately repealed. Howel tells us in his Letters*, that "king James, a great while, was loth to believe there were witches; but that which happened to my lord Francis of Rutland's children convinced him." This is contradictory to the tenor of the "Dæmonologia," which was published long before. In 1618, Joan Flower, and her two daughters, were accused of murdering Henry, lord Roos, by witchcraft, up his hand. This remarkable circumstance, compared with lord Clarendon's account of his sudden death ||, affords a strong presumptive proof that his distemper was an apoplexy. This anecdote may be depended on as a fact, as it was told by a descendant of the Pembroke family, who had often heard it related.

These three women are said to have entered into a formal contract with the devil, and to have become " devils incarnate themselves." He possessed all the phlegm requisite for a Spanish embassy; and even for the tedious and fruitless negotiations of this reign. His credit in the court of Spain was beyond that of any other ambassador; and he received greater marks of distinction from his Catholic majesty. In the next reign, the duke of Buckingham, who hated the man, dared to attack the minister; but he was bravely repelled †. Upon the breaking out of the Civil War, he sided with the parliament, and had the command of two troops of horse in their service; but when he saw that monarchy itself was in danger, he adhered to the king. Lord Sawley was employed in several embassies in this reign. He was princely in his entertainment, magnificent in his dress, and splendid in his retinue. The king considered the vanity of this lord as ministerial to his purposes, and thought to dazzle foreign courts into respect for his ambassador; but he was generally treated with coldness, if not with contempt*. Arthur Wilson has given us a description of one of his dresses †, and Lloyd of one of the pies which was brought to his table ‡, by which we may judge of his extravagance §. He was, abstracted from his vanity, a man of a valuable character, and a complete gentleman. He was afterwards created viscount Doncaster, and earl of Carlisle. It should be observed, that his passion for feasting and dress continued, almost to the last moment of his life, even when he knew that he was given over by his physicians. Ob. 25 April, 1636.

This was an affront to the king, as well as his ambassador, as James had a particular aversion to that animal. The opprobrious pig was the occasion of much laughter at this time.

It is probable that some of their shoes were but slightly fastened, for the more ostentatious display of this vanity; and especially as a smith went in the procession, with a bag of horse shoes of the same metal, for a supply. If James had married his son Charles to the infant, and she had received the mines of Potosi for her dowry, he could not well have carried his profusion to a higher pitch, than he did in this embassy. When the earls of Carlisle and Holland espoused Henrietta Maria, in the name of Charles I. they were clothed in beaten silver.

Bishop Bancroft, who was translated from London to Canterbury, was a stout and zealous champion for the church, which he learnedly and ably defended to the confusion of its adversaries. Hence it was, that he was censured by the puritans as a friend to popery; but the imputation was absolutely groundless; on the contrary, by his address, in setting some of the secular priests against the Jesuits, as St. Paul did the Pharisees against the Sadducees, he greatly reduced the force of the most formidable body of men engaged in the service of the church of

There is a portrait of him in the University Library at Cambridge, and another in the gallery at Gorbambury, near St. Alban's.

Archbishop Abbot recommended himself to king James, by his prudent behaviour in Scotland, in relation to the union of the churches of that kingdom; and by his "Narrative of the Case of Sprot," who was executed in 1608, for having been concerned in the Gowry conspiracy. As the reality of that dark design had been called in question, he endeavoured, by this narrative, to settle the minds of the people in the belief of it. He was a prelate of great learning and piety, but was esteemed a puritan in doctrine; and in discipline, too remiss for one placed at the head of the church*. Archbishop Hutton had the boldness, in a sermon which he preached before queen Elizabeth, at Whitehall, to urge home to her conscience the delicate point of fixing the succession. He even told her, "that Nero was especially hated for wishing to have no successor; and that Augustus was the worse beloved for appointing an ill man to succeed him;" and very plainly intimated, that the eyes of the nation were turned upon the king of Scots, as the prince who, from proximity of blood, might reasonably expect to ascend the throne. It is probable that this highly pleased every one of the audience but the queen, who, contrary to their expectation, had command enough of her temper to stifle her resentment, and, with great composure in her countenance, to thank him for his discourse: but she soon after sent two counsellors to him with a very sharp reproof. It appears that she was

This worthy prelate, who had been an ornament to the university of Oxford, was no less an ornament to his high station in the church. He had an admirable talent for preaching, which he never suffered to lie idle; but used to go from one town to another, to preach to crowded audiences. He kept an exact account of the sermons which he preached, after he was preferred; by which it appears, that he preached, when dean of Durham, 721; when bishop of that diocese, 550; and when archbishop of York, 721; in all, 1992*. John King was a very celebrated preacher at court, in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. He was, by the latter, preferred to the deanry of Christ-Church; whence he was, for his merit, removed to the see of London. He was a great master of his tongue and his pen, and was styled by James, “the king of preachers †.” He published lectures on Jonas, and several other sermons. The calumny of his dying in the communion of the church of Rome, which was asserted in print, has been amply refuted. Ob. 1621. The quaint compliment of King James to Dr. Martin Heaton, bishop of Ely, who was as fat as Vaughan, is equally applicable, and, indeed, hath been applied to that prelate. “Fat men are apt to make lean sermons; but yours are not lean, but larded with good learning †.” The mode of larding was far from being limited to divinity; it prevailed in almost every species of composition; and it is a known fact, that those sermons were generally double larded, which were preached at court.

attended him, to bring him something to mark a particular spot. The man took up a fragment of a tomb, which lay among the ruins, upon which was inscribed "Resurgam;" "I shall rise again." Sir Christopher was struck with the inscription, the moment he saw it, and interpreted it as a good omen. The event was answerable, as he lived to see the church finished. indeed he traced through all his preferments by his public benefactions, and acts of munificence. He was at the expence of bringing a rivulet into the town of Cambridge, through King's Ditch; which, before it was cleared for this purpose, was a great nuisance to that place. He laid out large sums in repairing and beautifying the church and episcopal palace at Wells; and in finishing the church at Bath, which Oliver King his predecessor had begun, and which for near a century had the appearance of a ruin. While he sat in the see at Winchester, he was employed in his elaborate edition of king James's works in Latin. Ob. 20 July, 1618, Æt. 80. This pious and very learned prelate, who may be ranked with the best preachers, and completest scholars of his age, appeared to much greater advantage in the pulpit, than he does now in his works; which abound with Latin quotations, and trivial witticisms †. He was a man of polite manners, and lively conversation; and could quote Greek and Latin authors, or even pun, with king James. Charles, the son of that monarch, a little before his death, recommended his sermons to the perusal of his children. Bishop Andrews is supposed to have had a considerable hand in the book of Chronology published by the famous Isaacson, who was his amanuensis. Ob. 21 Sept. 1626, Æt. 71. * Here witticism and conceit would be extremely absurd, as the greatest purity and simplicity of language are highly proper, when we speak of, or to, the Deity.

Gervase Babington was some time chaplain to Henry, earl of Pembroke, and was supposed to have assisted his countess in her translation of the Psalms *. He left his books, which were of considerable value, to the library of the cathedral of Worcester. His works consist of notes on the Pentateuch, expositions of the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, and several sermons. His style is not free from such puerilities as are found in most of the best writers of this age. Ob. 17 May, 1610.

Dr. John Jegon succeeded Dr. Copcot in the mastership of Corpus Christi College, in Cambridge, the 10th of August, 1590, where he soon signalized himself by that just œconomy and singular prudence which gained him the esteem of the society over which he presided. Hence it was that they considerably augmented his salary and fee for preaching. He was, in five years, four times vice-chancellor of the university; in which office he acted with ability and spirit. Being appealed to, in a controverted election of a Master of Catharine Hall, he boldly and uprightly gave his opinion contrary to that of the queen and the archbishop of Canterbury. As a bishop, he distinguished himself by his zeal for conformity, and the exact management of his revenues, by which he was enabled to purchase a very considerable estate, and to enrich his family. This in the latter part of his life, seems to have been the principal object of his attention. He deceased the thirteenth of March, 1617. He was thought to have died too rich for a bishop, and to have expended too little of his ample fortune in acts of charity. The station in which he appeared to the greatest advantage, was that of master of his college, where he displayed all the discretion and gravity which was suitable to the character of a governor, and all that pleasantry and facetiousness which could recommend him as an agreeable companion. See more of him in Masters's "History of Corpus Christi College."

Henry Robinson was a native of Carlisle. In 1581, he was unanimously elected provost of Queen's College, in Oxford, at the head of which he continued about eighteen years, and by his example and authority restored its discipline, and left it in a most flourishing state, when he was deservedly promoted to the see of Carlisle. He was eminent in the university as a disputant and a preacher.

FRANCISCUS GODWIN, episcopus Landavenfis, Æt. 51, 1613; Vertue sc. 1742; b. sb.

Francis Godwin was a learned divine, and a celebrated historian and antiquary. His laborious and useful “Catalogue of the Bishops of England,” first published in 1601, was generally approved. It was for this valuable work, that queen Elizabeth, who knew how to distinguish merit, promoted him to the bishopric of of Landaff. Dr. Richardson has published an improved and elegant edition of this book. In his younger years, he wrote his "Man in the Moon, or a Discourse of a Voyage thither, by Domingo Gonzales, 1638;" 8vo. This philosophic romance, which has been several times printed, shews that he had a creative genius*. His "Nuncius inanimatus," which contains instructions to convey secret intelligence, is very scarce. Ob. April, 1633.

* Domingo Gonzales, a little Spaniard, is supposed to be shipwrecked on an uninhabited island; where he taught several ganzas, or wild geese, to fly with a light machine, and to fetch and carry things for his conveniency. He, after some time, ventured to put himself into the machine, and they carried him with great ease. He happened to be in this aerial chariot, at the time of the year when these ganzas, which were birds of passage, took their flight to the moon, and was directly carried to that planet. He has given a very ingenious description of what occurred to him on his way, and the wonderful things which he saw there. Dr. Swift seems to have borrowed several hints from this novel, in his voyage to Laputa.

In 1614, he was promoted to the bishopric of Litchfield and Coventry, whence he was translated to Norwich, and died within a year after his translation, 12 May, 1619. He was one of the translators of the Bible, in this reign*. I have heard of none of his works besides, but his "Convocation Book." Robert Abbot, elder brother to George, archbishop of Canterbury, and in learning much his superior, was some time master of Baliol College in Oxford, and Regius professor of divinity in that university. In 1615, he was, for his great merit, preferred to the see of Salisbury. The most celebrated of his writings, which are chiefly controversial, was his book "De Antichristo." King James commanded his "Paraphrase on the Apocalypse" to be printed with the second edition of his work; by which he paid himself a much greater compliment, than he did the bishop. Ob. 2 Mar. 1617, Æt. 58. He was one of the five bishops who within six years, sat in the chair of Salisbury, in this reign.

Arthur Lake, brother to Sr Thomas Lake, principal secretary of state to James I. was educated at New College in Oxford. In the beginning of this reign, he was preferred to the rich mastership of the hospital of St. Cross, near Winchester. He was afterwards archdeacon of Surry, and dean of Worcester; and in 1616, he succeeded bishop Montague in the see of Bath and Wells. Several writers speak of him as a pattern of every kind of virtue. He was an excellent preacher, of extensive reading in divinity, and one of the best textuaries of his time. His works, which were published after his decease, consist of expositions of several of the Psalms, sermons and meditations. Ob. 4 May, 1626, Æt. 59.

His parts were shining and solid; and wore, without any sensible diminution, to an advanced age. He distinguished himself whilst he was at Oxford, as a logician, an orator, and a poet; and was still more distinguished as a divine. He perhaps wrote upon a greater variety of subjects, than any other clergyman of his time: of these the Oxford antiquary has given us a catalogue. He was deeply engaged in the Arminian controversy, and was one of the five divines sent to the synod of Dort, by James, where he maintained that the bishops were successors to the twelve apostles, and the presbyters to the seventy disciples. His elegant oration before the States of Holland, is in print. His "Thankful Remembrance of God's Mercy," &c. has gone through more editions than any of his works. In the fourth, printed in 4to. 1630, are a series of upwards of twenty small historical prints, chiefly relating to the plots and conspiracies against the church and state, in the reigns of Elizabeth and James, engraved by Fred. Bishop Williams seems to have owed his first preferment, and to that his succeeding dignities, ties, to his magnificent and well conducted entertainment of the lord-chancellor Egerton, and the Spanish ambassadors, during his proctorship, at Cambridge. The chancellor told him, "that he was fit to serve a king;" and soon after recommended him at court. Lord Clarendon has given us a more disadvantageous, but probably a truer character of him, than bishop Hacket, who was his chaplain; as the probity of the former is less to be suspected, than the partiality of the latter. Both these authors have given us to understand, that his parts, whatever his principles might be, were very extraordinary; and his constitution still more extraordinary than his parts; as he could apply himself to study or business, and support his health, with only three hours sleep. He was at first despised by the lawyers, in his office of lord-keeper; but was soon admired for his deep penetration, solid judgment, and retentive memory; which enabled him to recapitulate any cause tried before him, without losing a circumstance. See the next reign, Class VI.

John Boys, who was educated at Clare Hall, in Cambridge, was famous for his Postils in defence of our Liturgy; and was also much esteemed for his good life. He gained great applause by turning the Lord's Prayer into the following execration*, when he preached at Paul's Cross, on the fifth of November, in this reign. "Our pope, which art in Rome, cursed " be thy name; perish may thy kingdom;
" hindred may thy will be as it is in heaven,
" so in earth. Give us this day our cup in the " Lord's Supper; and remit our monies which † Polemical divinity, which is sometimes styled "Theologia armata," was never more encouraged, or better discoloured, than at this period. Almost every divine attacked the pope, or one of his champions; and the most intemperate rage against the enemy was generally the most applauded. The king contrived an excellent expedient to perpetuate hostilities, by erecting a college for this branch of theology at Chelsea, where he appointed veterans for training up young divines to the service.

|| By bishop Bull, &c.

John Donne entered into holy orders by the persuasion of James I. who often expressed great satisfaction in his having been the means of introducing so worthy a person into the church. We hear much of him as a poet, but very little as a divine, though in the latter character he had great merit. His "Pseudo martyr," in which he has effectually confuted the doctrine of the papal supremacy, is the most valuable of his prose writings. His sermons abound too much with the pedantry of the time in which they were written, to be at all esteemed in the present age. Some time before his death, when he was emaciated with study, and sickness, he caused himself to be wrapped up in a sheet, which was gathered over his head, in the manner of a shroud; and having closed his eyes, he had his portrait taken; which was kept by his bed-side, as long as he lived, to remind him of mortality. The effigy on his monument, in St. Paul's church, was done after this portrait. See Dugdale's History of that cathedral, p. 62. Ob. 31 March, 1631.

testant religion, and published his book, “De Republica Ecclesiastica.” The king gave him the deanery of Windsor, the mastership of the Savoy, and the rich living of West Ildestev, in Berkshire. Though the publication of his book was a crime never to be forgiven, he was weak enough to give credit to a letter sent him by the procurement of Gondamor, which not only promised him pardon but preferment, if he would renounce his new religion. He returned to Italy, relapsed to the church of Rome, and was presently after imprisoned by the inquisition. Grief and hard treatment soon put an end to his life, in the year 1605, and the 64th of his age. He was the first that accounted for the phenomena of the rainbow, in his book “De Radiis Visus et Lucis.” We are much indebted to him for father Paul’s excellent “History of the Council of Trent,” the manuscript of which he procured for archbishop Abbot.

His “Synopsis Papismi,” the fifth edition of which was printed by command of James I. gained him the highest reputation of any of his works. His industry is evident from his numerous writings; but his christian and moral virtues were not exceeded by his industry. Ob. 1621, Æt. 59.  Mr. Mores: “ Quond. in vet. Capella Coll. Reg. Oxon.”*

Henry Airay, who succeeded Dr. Henry Robinson in the provostship of Queen's College, in Oxford, was born in Westmoreland, and educated by the care, and under the patronage of Bernard Gilpin, well known by the appellation of the Northern Apostle. He was a constant and zealous preacher at Oxford, especially at St. Peter's in the East. His principal work is a “ Course of Lectures on St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians.” He was one of those Calvinists who wrote against bowing at the name of Jesus; and was, for his learning, gravity, and piety, greatly admired and revered by those of his persuasion. Christopher Potter, his cousin german, was the editor of his works.

JOHN DENISON, D. D.

John Denison, who was an eminent preacher in this reign, was educated at Baliol College in Oxford. He was some time domestic chaplain to the duke of Buckingham, and afterwards to king James. It is probable that he never had any preferment in the church, besides the vicarage in St. Mary's in Reading; which he held, together with the free-school there. His predecessor in the employment of schoolmaster was Andrew Bird, and his successor William Page. He published many sermons, and several pieces of practical divinity and controversy. The most considerable of his works seems to have been his book in Latin, on auricular confession, which is a confutation of the arguments of Bellarmine on that subject. Ob. Jan. 1628-9.

together

WILLIAM SLATER, D. D. large beard; 12mo.

William Slater*, or Slatyer, was born in Somersetshire, and received his education at Oxford, where he took the degree of doctor of divinity in 1623; having acquired a very considerable reputation, for his poetical talent, and his knowledge in English history. He was author of Elegies and Epitaphs on Anne of Denmark, to whom he was chaplain. They were written in Hebrew, Greek, Latin and English; and printed in 1619. He also published "Psalms, or Songs of Sion, turned into the Language and set to the Tunes of a strange Land." Psalms in four languages, with musical notes engraved on copper: to one of the tunes is prefixed the name of Milton, the father of our great poet. I am very credibly informed, that the head was placed before an edition of this book dated 1650; but it is certain, that it was not then published by the author, who died at Otterden in Kent, 1647. His "Palæ-Albion, or the History of Great Britain from the first peopling of this Island to the Reign of King James," London, 1621, folio, in Latin and English verse, is his capital work: of this the English marginal notes are the most valuable part. His Genealogy of king James deduced from Adam, is a laborious trifle.

DoCTOR SUTTON, a small head, in a sheet of divine instructions, entitled "The Christian's Jewel, fit to adorn the Heart, and deck the House of every true Protestant: taken out of St. Mary Overies Church, in the lectureship of the late deceased Doctor Sutton."

Thomas Sutton, one of the most eloquent and admired preachers of his time, was born at Bampton, in Westmoreland, and educated at Queen's College, in Oxford. He was minister of Culham, near Abington, and was there much followed for his preaching, as he was afterwards at St. Mary Overies, in Southwark, where he was lecturer. Many of his discourses are in print, and specified by Mr. Wood. His "Lectures on the 11th Chapter to the Romans" were published by John Downham*, who married his widow. The pious author, who had been to "put the last hand" to a free-school, which he had founded at his native place, was, to the great regret of all that knew his worth, drowned in his passage from Newcastle to London, the 24th of August, 1623. The sheet in which his head is engraved, seems to contain some passages which are taken in short-hand from his mouth, while he was preaching.

GILBERTUS PRIMROSIUS, Scotus, Æt. 52; I. E. Lafne sc. 8vo.

Gilbert Primerose, a Scotsman, was well known at this period for his learning and piety. He was a considerable time one of the preachers belonging to the Protestant church at Bourdeaux, as he was afterwards to that of the French Protestants in London. He was chaplain in ordinary to the king, who, in 1624, recommended him to the university of Oxford, where he was created doctor of divinity. In 1628, he succeeded to Dr. John Buckridge in his canonry of Windsor. He was author of several well written theological books in the French language, some of which have been translated into Latin and English. He died in October, or November, 1642. Mr. Wood, who has given us a detail of his works, informs us, that Gilbert Primerose, serjeant-surgeon to king James, was of the same family.

There is a copy of this, in 12mo. inscribed Robert Bolton, bachelor in divinity.

Robert

Robert Bolton, a divine of puritan principles, was one of the greatest scholars of his time, and very eminent for his piety. The Greek language was so familiar to him, that he could speak it with almost as much facility as his mother tongue. In 1605, when king James visited the university of Oxford, he was appointed by the vice-chancellor to read in natural philosophy, and dispute before him, in the public schools. He was generally esteemed a most persuasive preacher, and as judicious a casuist. His practical writings are numerous. His book "On Happiness," which has gone through many editions, was the most celebrated of his works. When he lay at the point of death, one of his friends, taking him by the hand, asked him if he was not in great pain; "Truly, said he, the greatest pain that I feel is your cold hand;" and presently expired. Ob. 17 Dec. 1631, Æt. 60*.

* A late ingenious author has opened a new source of criticism from books of this kind, for illustrating the Scriptures. His treatise, intitled, “Observations on divers Passages of Scripture, &c. grounded on Circumstances incidentally mentioned in Books of Voyages and Travels into the East,” 1764, 8vo. contains many curious and useful remarks, deduced from the manners and customs of the Eastern countries.

He is generally free from the affected language, and ridiculous metaphors, which disgrace most of the books of his time †. He was famous for his skill in astrology; and is said to have foretold the precise time of his death. It is certain that the same thing was reported of him that was before said of Cardan, that he died a voluntary death, that his prediction might prove true: but this is very improbable. Ob. Jan. 1639. Thomas Wilson, minister of St. George's Church in Canterbury, was highly esteemed for his learning and piety. In 1614, he published his "Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans," which was generally approved. His "Christian Dictionary," which has been often printed, seems to have been the first book ever composed in English, by way of Concordance*. He died in the latter end of this reign, or in the beginning of the next; as he is styled, "late minister," &c. in the title to the second edition of his Commentary, 1627. ### NON CONFORMISTS.

This head may be placed with equal propriety in the next reign.

John Dod received his education at Jesus College in Cambridge. He was in learning excelled by few, and in unaffected piety by none. Nothing was ever objected to this meek and humble man, but his being a puritan. He was particularly eminent for his knowledge of the Hebrew language, which he taught the famous John Gregory of Christ Church in Oxford*. He was, from his Exposition of the Ten Commandments, which he wrote in conjunction with Robert Cleaver, commonly called the Decalogist. His Sayings have been printed in various forms: many of them on two sheets of paper, are still to be seen pasted on the walls of cottages. Arthur Hildersham, who was great-grandson, by the mother, to George, duke of Clarence, was educated in the Roman Catholic religion; and when he was about fifteen years of age, disinherited by his father, for refusing to go to Rome. The earl of Huntingdon, his kinsman, very generously became his patron, and contributed to his support at Cambridge. He was several times silenced in this reign for nonconformity, but was restored by archbishop Abbot. Lilly, the astrologer, in the Memoirs of his own Life, tells us, “that he dissented not from the church in any article of faith, but only about wearing the surplice, baptizing with the cross, and kneeling at the sacrament.” His “Lectures on the 51st Psalm,” and his book on Fasting, shew him to have been a learned and pious man. Ob. 4 Mar. 1631, Æt. 69.

JOHANNES CARTER, fidelis ille servus Dei, et pastor Bramfordiensis, in agro Suffolciensi. J. Dunstall f. In Clarke’s “Lives of English Divines.” There is another portrait of him engraved by Vaughn.

John Carter was born in Kent, and educated at Clare Hall, in Cambridge. He was many years minister at Bramford in Suffolk, and also rector of Belstead, in the same county. Though he had been often troubled for nonconformity, he took every occasion of exerting himself against popery, Arminianism, and the new ceremonies. Clarke and Neale speak of him as a man of great industry, charity, and piety. The former tells us, that when he dined with several ministers at one of the magistrates houses at Ipswich, a very vain person, who sat at the table, undertook to answer any question that should be proposed to him, either in divinity or philosophy. A profound silence ensued, till Mr. Carter addressed him in these words. "I will go no farther than my trencher to puzzle you: here is a foal; now tell me the reason why this fish, which has always lived "in the salt water, should come out fresh?" As the challenger did not so much as attempt any answer, the scorn and laugh of the company were presently turned upon him. Ob. 21. Feb. 1634.

Hugh Broughton, a youth of an agreeable and promising aspect, was travelling on foot on the northern road, when he was accosted by the celebrated Bernard Gilpin, who asked him whither he was going. He told him to Oxford, in order to be a scholar. The apostolic Gilpin was so pleased with his appearance, and the quickness of his replies, that he took him with him to his own home, placed him in the school which he had founded, superintended his education, and at length sent him to Christ's College, in Cambridge. He was particularly famous for biblical learning: and his writings in that kind, particularly his "Consent of "Times *," shew him to have been an uncommon genius; but his descending to disputes about the colour of Aaron's ephod, and other things equally frivolous, denote him a mean one. He was some time at the head of a conventicle in England; and afterwards belonged to a congregation of Brownist's at Amsterdam. He was a vehement preacher, and had a very strong propensity to wrangling both at home and abroad; but was, however, esteemed a notable writer in controversy. He has been very justly censured by the reverend Mr. Gilpin † for his ingratitude to his excellent patron, whom he endeavoured to supplant in the rectory of Houghton in the Spring. His fame was upon the decline when he returned to England; and his character became at length so despicable, that he was publicly ridiculed upon the stage ‡. Fuller conjectured that he died about the year 1600; but his death really happened, according to Mons. Bayle, in 1612. He was the first of our countrymen that explained the descent of Christ into hell by the word Hades, the place into which Christ descended after his crucifixion. This did not mean hell or the place of the damned; but only the state of the dead, or the invisible world, in which sense it was used by the Greek fathers §.

The persons represented are said in this pamphlet to have held intelligence with Gondamor, and to have met at the house of one Lovet, a principal antagonist of Broughton in this doctrine, which is now received by the Church of England. It is worthy of remark, that as this prelate was preaching a sermon at St. Paul's Cross ||, a sudden panic, occasioned by the caprice or folly of one of the audience, seized the multitude there assembled, who thought that the church was falling on their heads. The good bishop, who sympathized with the people, more from pity than from fear, after a sufficient pause, reassumed, and went through his sermon with great composure.

Dr. BISHOP.

William Bishop, who was born at Brayles, in Warwickshire, studied at Oxford, and in several foreign universities. He was employed in England as a missionary, in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. in both which he suffered imprisonment for acting in that capacity. He was consecrated bishop of Chalcedon, at Paris, the 4th of June, 1623, and invested with ordinary power to govern the Catholic church in England. He was esteemed a man of abilities, and was a very active and useful instrument to his party. He wrote several pieces of controversy against Mr. Perkins and Dr. Robert Abbot, and published Pits's book "De illustribus Angliæ Scriptoribus." His gentle and amiable manners gained him esteem with men of all persuasions. He died the 16th of April, 1624. He was the first of the church of Rome that, after the Reformation, was sent into England in an episcopal character*.

Dr. BRISTOW.

Richard Bristow, who was born a Worcester, was educated in the university of Oxford, where he and Campian entertained queen Elizabeth with a public disputation, and acquitted themselves with applause. He shortly after conformed to the church of Rome, and was invited by the famous Allen, afterwards cardinal, to Douay, where he distinguished himself in the English college, as he did afterwards in that of Rheims, in both which he held considerable employments. The following character of him was found by Dod among the records in the former of these colleges; "He might rival Allen in prudence, Stapleton in acuteness, Campian in eloquence, Wright in theology, and Martin in languages." His death was occasioned by severe application to his studies.

Dr. WRIGHT.

Dr. Wright, in the list of the names of Romish priests and Jesuits, resident about the city of London, 1624*, is said to be a grave ancient man, treasurer to the priests, and very rich. He was probably a different person from Dr. Thomas Wright, who was reader of divinity, in the English college at Douay, and author of the book, "De Passionibus Animæ," and several noted pieces of controversy. The latter, who, according to Dod, does not appear to have been a missionary here since the reign of Elizabeth, died about the year 1623.

Father PALMER

was a Jesuit.

Father LURTICE

Dod mentions a person, whose name was Thomas Maxfield that studied at Douay, where he was ordained priest, and sent upon a mission into England, in 1615, and executed the eleventh of July, the following year, on account of his sacerdotal character. Quære, if the person represented in the print?

F. HIGHAM.

John Higham, who, for the most part, lived abroad, employed himself chiefly in translating religious books from the Spanish. The last of his works mentioned by Dod, is the "Exposition of the Mass," which is dated 1622.

F. SWEET.

John Sweet, a native of Devonshire, studied at Rome, where he entered into the society of Jesus, in 1608. He was sent on a mission from Rome to England, in this reign, and died at St. Omer's, the 26th of February, 1622. He is said to have been the author of "A Manifestation of the Apostacy of M. Ant. de Dominis," printed at St. Omer's, 1617, in 4to. Dr. Daniel Featley, who was his opponent in a disputation, has introduced him in his "Romish Fisher caught, or a conference between Sweet and Fisher," Lond. 1624.

F. PLOYDEN (or Plowden), a Jesuit, was probably a relation of the famous Plowden, author of the "Reports," who was a Roman Catholic.

Dr. SMITH.

Dr. Richard Smith, bishop of Chalcedon, appears, according to Dod's account of him, not to have borne any ecclesiastical character in England before the year 1625. It is therefore very probable, that another Dr. Smith is here meant, and especially as the two following persons sons of the name are mentioned in the list of Romish priests and Jesuits resident about the city of London, in 1624. "Dr. Smith, senior, some time of the college of Rome, and author of divers pestilent books; and Dr. Smith, junior, author of divers other books no less dangerous." A strong party was raised against the bishop of Chalcedon, by the regular clergy, who loudly accused him of infringing their privileges. This forced him to abscond.

Father LOVE T

Father WORTHINGTON.

Thomas Worthington, who was born at Blainscoe, near Wigan, in Lancashire, studied at Oxford and Douay, where he was president of the English college. He was afterwards several years at Rome, and was some time apostolic notary. Being desirous of seeing England again, where he had formerly been an active missionary, he obtained leave to return thither, and shortly after died, in 1626. He wrote annotations for the Douay Bible, in the translation of which he had a principal share, and was author of several books mentioned by Dod. His "Catalogus Martyrum in Anglia," &c. was sold at the high price of 11s. 6d. at the sale of Mr.

was a Jesuit.

was also a Jesuit. I know nothing of father Wood, who was probably of the same fraternity. He is the fifth person mentioned in the description of the print.

Henry Garnet, who was born in Nottinghamshire, received his education at Rome, where he entered into the society of Jesus, when he was twenty years of age. Sir EDWARD HERBERT, ambaffador to France. See a description of his portrait in the next reign, Class IX.

Sir Edward Herbert had too much spirit and fire for the phlegmatic and pacific James; and was better qualified to threaten, than to remonstrate. ROBERTUS SHERLEY, Anglus, Comes Cesareus, Eques auratus. Under the oval is this inscription: "Magni Sophi Persarum Legatus ad sereniss. D. N. Paulum P. P. V. cæterosque Principes Christianos. Ingressas Romam, solemnî pompa, die 28 Septemb. 1609, ætat. suæ 28. G. M. f. (Romæ) 8vo.

I never saw this print but in Mr. Gulston's collection.

Sir Robert Shirley, brother to sir Anthony, was introduced by him to the Persian court; whence in 1609, and the twenty-eighth year of his age, he was sent ambassador to Rome, in the pontificate of Paul V. He entered that city with Eastern magnificence, and was treated with great distinction by the Pope. A spirit of adventure ran through the family of the Shirleys. Sir Francis, the eldest of the three brothers, was unfortunate.

“RICHARD PERCEVAL, Esq. Secretary, Remembrancer, and one of the Commissioners for the Office of Receiver General of the Court of Wards in England, Register of the same Court in Ireland, and Member of Parliament for the Borough of Richmond, in the County of York. Born Anno 1550, died 1620. Æt. 69.” Faber f. 8vo. Engraved for the “History of the House of Yvery,” &c.

This gentleman descended from a family which was long seated at North Weston, and afterwards at Sydenham, near Bridgwater, in the county of Somerset, where it flourished for more than five centuries. He was a principal officer under Robert Cecil, earl of Salisbury, in the court of wards, and was appointed register of that court when it was erected in Ireland. This occasioned the removal of his family into that kingdom, where it continued to flourish. He was ancestor to the earl of Egmont.

The lord Ellesmere, founder of the house of Bridgwater, adorned the office of chancellor, by his knowledge, his integrity, and his writings. When the king received the seal of him at his resignation, he was in tears*, the highest testimony he could pay to his merit. Several of his writings relating to his high office, and the court in which he presided, are in print †.

† See Worral's Cat. of Law Books.

He died in a very advanced age, 1617. It was while lord Ellesmere held the great seal, that the famous contest began betwixt the courts of Common Law and that of Chancery; the jurisdiction of which, by the tyranny of custom, rather than the design of its institution, was much more circumscribed than it is at present. Sir Edward Coke, who with great judgment had strong prejudices, asserted that a cause gained in the King's Bench by a flagrant imposition, could not be reversed by the Court of Equity*.

This fraud, which equals any thing that Cicero relates in his "Offices," lost the plaintiff his suit. See "Biog. Brit." artic. Egerton, note (F). Knowledge, judgment, and eloquence, were eminently united in the lord chancellor Bacon. But these great qualities were debased, or rendered useless by his want of integrity. He that presided with such great abilities, as the arbiter of right and wrong, in the highest court of justice in the kingdom, was the dupe of his own servants, who are said to have cheated him at the lower end of the table, while he sat abstracted at the upper end. It has been alledged in his favour, that though he took bribes, his decrees were just. See Class IX.

scarcely compensated for his insolence and excessive anger; which frequently vented themselves in scurrility and abuse, when he was sitting on the bench*. He carried his adulation still higher than his insolence, when he called the duke of Buckingham "our Saviour" upon his return from Spain†. It is remarkable that there were only fifteen volumes of Reports extant, when his three first volumes were published‡. There is as great a disproportion betwixt the collective body of the law at present, and that which was in Sir Edward Coke's time, as there is betwixt the latter and the Twelve Tables. Viner has abridged it into twenty-two folios; and Sir William Blackstone, like an expert chymist, has drawn off the spirit, and left the caput mortuum for the benefit of the lawyers. He died at his house at Stoke in Buckinghamshire, the third of September, 1634, in the eighty-third year of his age§.

Upon the accession of James, he was knighted, and constituted chancellor and undertreasurer of the exchequer; and in 1607, sworn of the privy-council. He was not only one of the best civilians, but also one of the best men of his time. His parts and industry rendered him an ornament to his profession: and his great charity and benevolence an ornament to human nature. He died the 28th of April, 1639, and is buried in the church of Great St. Helen's, near Bishopsgate, London. His monument, designed by himself, represents a scroll of parchment. Adam Blackwood, a Scotsman, who had been a retainer to the unfortunate queen Mary, and who had great obligations to her, distinguished himself as a violent advocate for that princess. In 1587, he published in French, his “Martyrdom of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scotland,” written with all that bitterness of resentment which is natural for a man of spirit to feel, who, by an act of flagrant injustice, was deprived of his mistress and his sovereign, his friend and his benefactress. He addresses himself, in a vehement strain of passion, to all the princes of Europe to avenge her death; declaring that they are unworthy of royalty, if they are not roused on so interesting and pressing an occasion. He laboured hard to prove that Henry the Eighth’s marriage with Anne Bolen was incestuous, a calumny too gross to merit a formal refutation. He continued many years in the station of a counsellor, or senator at Poitiers. He died in 1613. His writings, which shew him to have been a civilian, a poet, and divine, were collected and published at Paris, by Sebastian Cramoisy, 1644. See more of him, in Nicolson’s “Scottish Historical Library,” in Samuel Jebb’s second folio, concerning cerning Mary, queen of Scots, and in the preface to it. Henry Blackwood, royal professor of physic at Paris, of whom there is an octavo print, by Mellan, was of the same family.

ARTHUR, lord CHICHESTER, lord baron of Belfast, lord high-treasurer of Ireland, and some time lord deputy of that kingdom; eleven years and upwards, one of the privy-council in England. In armour.

Lord Chichester, in his youth, robbed one of queen Elizabeth's purveyors, who were but little better than robbers themselves. He soon after, to avoid a prosecution, fled into France, where he signalized himself as a soldier, under Henry IV. who knighted him for his gallant behaviour. He was shortly after pardoned by the queen, and employed against the rebels in Ireland. In 1604, he was, for his eminent services in reducing and civilizing that kingdom, made lord-deputy, and created baron of Belfast by James. During his government, the Irish began to assimilate themselves to the manners and customs of the English, and the harp was first marshalled with the British arms. Sir HORACE VERE, since baron of Tilbury; Faithorne fc. 4<sup>to</sup>. In Sir Francis Vere's "Commentarie's."

Sir Horace Vere, younger brother to Sir Francis, had the command of the forces sent by James to recover the Palatinate. He was a man of a most steady and sedate courage; and possessed that presence of mind in the greatest dangers and emergencies, which is the highest qualification of a general. It was owing to this quality, that he made that glorious retreat from Spinola, which was the greatest action of his life*. Sir Edward Cecil, second son of Thomas, the first earl of Exeter, was one of the most considerable generals of his time; he having served for thirty-five years in the Netherlands, the best school for war in this age. He had the command of the English forces at the battle of Newport, and was, in the beginning of the next reign, admiral of the Fleet sent against Cadiz. This expedition was attended with some disgrace, as the fleet arrived at that place

I am informed, that this print was prefixed to Taylor, the Water Poet’s “ Honour of the noble Capitaine O’Toole,” first edition, 1622. This pamphlet is reprinted in the folio edition of his works.

Captain O’Toole was a man of an odd aspect, and a singular composition of vanity, courage, and caprice. He took every occasion of exercising and boasting of his precipitate valour, which he abundantly displayed against the Irish rebels. Ireland was not the only scene of his romantic bravery; he served as a volunteer in various nations, and was as notorious and ridiculous in other parts of Europe as he was in his own country. He, like Tom Coryat, was the whetstone and the but of wit. John Taylor has exercised his rude pen in an ironical panegyric on him, dedicated “ To the unlimited “ memory of Arthur O’Toole, or O’Toole the “ Great, being the son and heir of Brian

OFFICERS of the NAVY.

HENRY VERE, earl of Oxford, mentioned in the second Class, was vice-admiral for the English coast, under the duke of Buckingham, in this reign*.

Captain John Smith deserves to be ranked with the greatest travellers and adventurers of his age. He was some time in the service of the emperor, and the prince of Transylvania, against the Grand Signor, where he distinguished himself by challenging three Turks of quality to single combat, and cutting off their heads; for which heroic exploit, he bore three Turks heads betwixt a chevron, in his arms †. He afterwards went to America, where he was taken prisoner by the savage Indians, from whom he found means to escape. He often hazarded

Sir Hugh Middleton united two springs, one in the parish of Amwell, near Hertford, and the other near Ware; and conveyed them through a winding course of sixty miles to London. He is said to have erected no less than eight hundred bridges, for necessary passages over this river. This great work, which seems to have been better suited to the genius of a Roman emperor, than of a citizen of London, was begun the twentieth of February, 1608, and finished the twenty-ninth of September, 1613.

Sir

SIR RICHARD SPENCER; in a collection of beads published by Hondius, 1608.

There is a small bead of him, inscribed "H. Richard Spencer, Ridder, Ambaf. Extraord." It is engraved with seventeen other beads of ambassadors to the States of Holland. This shows that he may be placed in the fifth class.

Sir Richard Spencer of Offley, in Hertfordshire, was fourth son of sir John Spencer of Althorp, in Northamptonshire, ancestor of the present duke of Marlborough. The Spencers of Hertfordshire are descended from sir Richard.

"Sir PHILIP PARKER, a Morley; of Ewarton, in Com. Suffolk, Knt. son of sir Henry Parker, Knt. eldest son and heir of Henry Parker, Lord Morley, and lineal ancestor of Catharine Parker, Countess of Egmont; knighted by Queen Elizabeth, 1578." J. Faber f. 1747, 8vo.

In the "History of the House of Yvery," for which this print was engraved, is a particular account of the family of Parker. It there appears that this gentleman's mother was Elizabeth, daughter and sole heir of sir Philip Calthrope, of Erwarton, in Suffolk, knt. by Anne, daughter of William Boleyn, knt. and aunt to queen Elizabeth. Sir Philip left a daughter Catharine, who espoused sir William Cornwallis, ancestor to lord Cornwallis; and a son, named Calthrope, who, in 1640, was knight of the shire for Suffolk.

Sir William Wadd, a man of great learning, generosity, and benevolence, who had been employed by queen Elizabeth in several embassies, was removed from the lieutenancy of the Tower, to make way for sir Gervase Elways †, a man of a prostitute character, who was the chief instrument in poisoning sir Thomas Overbury. The pretence for his removal was his allowing the lady Arabella Stuart, his prisoner, a key. Lloyd tells us, that “to his directions we owe Rider’s “Dictionary;” to his encouragement Hooker’s “Polity;” and to his charge, Gruter’s “Inscriptions ‡.” This excellent man employed a faithful and judicious friend to admonish him of every thing that he saw amiss in his conduct.

We are informed by Collins, in his Peerage, that Michael, eldest son of John lord Darcy, married Margaret daughter of Thomas Wentworth, of Wentworth Woodhouse, in the county of York, esq. by whom he had a son John who, in 1587, became lord Darcy. This John lord Darcy, dying in 1635, left issue his only son John, and two daughters. It appears from this account, that Darcy Wentworth was not a son of any of the noble persons abovementioned, but was probably allied to this family*.

Thomas Sutton, in the early part of his life, travelled to those countries as a gentleman, to which he afterwards traded as a merchant. He was, for some time, in the army; in which he behaved himself so well, that he obtained a patent of queen Elizabeth for the office of master-general of the ordnance for life. No man was better acquainted with the mysteries of trade, and few with the methods of saving. By a long course of frugality and industry, he acquired a fortune superior to that of any private gentleman of his time. This enabled him to build and endow the hospital called the Charter House, one of the noblest foundations in the world. He paid 13000 l. for the ground only; and the expence of the building and endowment was answerable. He died the twelfth of December, 1611, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. Mr. John Aubrey tells us, that Ben Johnson has characterized him under the name of Volpone*.

Nicholas Wadham, of Merifield, in Somersetshire, a man of a respectable character, was, together with Dorothy his wife, the munificent founder of the college in Oxford, called after his name. His generosity and hospitality † were proportionate to the affluence of his fortune ‡. He and his wife, who were both of the Romish religion, had formed a design of founding a catholic seminary at Venice; but the love of their country got the better of their religious prejudices.

THOMAS TESDALE, (TISDALE) armiger; unus fundatorum Coll. Pembrochiæ, A.

* In his "Anecdotes of several extraordinary Persons," a MS. in the Ashmolean Museum.

S. Hearne, in his "Life of Sutton," says, it is probable, that Johnson never intended to characterize him under the name of Volpone; "for, in that age, several other men were pointed at, and who was the true person was then a matter of doubt. If the poet designed to injure the fame of Sutton, he was first of all an ungrateful wretch, to abuse those hands that afforded him bread; for he allowed him a constant pension: and secondly, he ditowned his very hand-writing, that he sent to our founder, in vindication of himself in this matter."

† Fuller says, "that he had great length in his extraction, breadth in his estate, and depth in his liberality. His hospital house was an inn at all times: a court at Christmas." Worthies in Somerset, p. 30.

‡ Of this various and contradictory accounts have been given. That which is most to be relied on is in Wood's "Hist. et Antiq. Univ. Oxon." ii. 324.

Thomas Tisdale, of Glympton, esq. was, with Richard Wightwick, or Whitwick, co-founder of Pembroke College in Oxford. Four of Tisdale's fellows are to be of his kindred, and the rest are to be elected from Abingdon school.

Alderman LEATE, a head in an oval. About the oval.

“ Let arms and arts thy praises speak,
“ Who wast their patron worthy Leate.”

“ London may boast thy praise, and magnify
“ Thy name, whose care her ruins did repair ;
“ And in exchange of foul deformity
“ Hath deckt and graced her with beauties “ rare,
“ The fame whereof refoundeth far and near.
“ Then honour him, who thus hath honour'd “ thee,
“ And love his name in all posterity.”

J. Payne sc.

Alderman Leate, a man of great ingenuity and public spirit, was well known in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. for the surveys which he took of different parts of the city of London, and the many useful and ornamental alterations which he projected in the streets and buildings. Some of them were, to the projector's honour, carried into execution. Stowe mentions a plan of Moorfields, as it was intended to be laid out by this person. It was to have been inserted in his “ Survey of London.”

“JOHN GRAVES, Gent. aged 102 “years, when drawn 1616. He was born in “Yorkshire, in 1513, and died at London, in “1616, aged 103 years. He was grandfather to “Rich. Graves of Mickleton, esq. grandfather
“to Rich. Graves of Mickleton, now living,
“1728.” Vertue sc. b. sb.

Richard Graves of Mickleton, in Gloucestershire, esq. a noted antiquary, caused this print to be engraved as a memorial of his ancestor; who appears, from his erect posture, and sensible countenance, to have been a very extraordinary person for one of his age.
